CHAPLAIN OF THE SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT, O. V. V. I.

"Ah! whence you glare
That fires the arch of heaven, that dark red smoke
Blotting the silver moon? The stars are quenched
In darkness and the pure and spangling snow
Gleams faintly through the gloom that gathers round.
Hark to the roar whose swift and deafening peals
In countless echoes through the mountain's ring,
Startling pale midnight on her starry throne.
Now swells the intermingling din: the jar
Frequent and frightful of the bursting bomb,
The falling beam, the shriek the groan, the shout
The ceaseless clangor and the rush of men
Inebriate with rage. Loud and more loud
The discord grows; till pale death shuts the scene
And o'er the conqueror and the conquered draws
His cold and bloody shroud."

War has its dark and bloody side, its serio-comic and its real funny side. Its hideous aspects are seen in its ruthless devastation, its wasted fields, its burning cities, its ruined realms, its ill used sick, its fearful conflicts and its slain and wounded soldiery. It is well that the battle is not always gained, that the march is not always unremitting, and the drill master not ever at his work, else no rifts would ever let the bright sunshine through the clouds of war. When the battle is fought, the march made, when victories are celebrated or defeat endured and the army rests for a time "to refit and reorganize," the camp abounds with good humor, with fun, with repartee, with song and joke and feats of valor that might well challenge the admiration of the heroes of all ages. After the charge on Mission Ridge two captains of the Seventeenth were celebrating the victory in "true army style" and lauding each his own valor when D. said to K. "I am a braver man than you Capt. K." "No you ain't, responded the other," "Yes I am (hic)" said D. and in the next battle I will rush right up to the cannon's (hic) mouth, so I will." "Now Capt. D. that is nothing" said K. "in the next battle I'll show you how brave I am, I'll just crawl right into the cannon (hic)." Both were brave men and valiant soldiers. When the order to charge the Ridge a few days before ran along the lines, one of these sons of Mars stepped to the head and front of his company, drew his sword and said "Soldiers, don't disgrace Company—follow me." A moment after a shell fell at his foot, exploding without harm, when our redoubtable Captain said "This is  close." The serious, the well nigh fatal, and the funny were all blended in the Irish boy of Captain Fox's Company E., at "Hoovers Gap." The First Brigade, if not our whole Division charged the enemy's left, and among others reported killed was our Irish boy. After the "Johnnies" were driven from their position and the Brigade was resting a while, the boys were lamenting the slain, among them the Irish boy whose brain it was said was pierced by a minnie ball, when up walked the Irish soldier to the Colonel crying and asking for a gun and cartridge box, declaring that "Some rascal sthole mine while I was kilt entirely jist." The grimly serio-comic to me, occurred December Fourth, 1864, near Waynesborough Georgia, on our march to the sea. General Kilpatrick on that day fairly whipped General Wheeler. Our Division supported Kilpatrick. At a certain dense forest approached by an open plain, it was thought Wheeler's men were drawn up in battle array awaiting us. Again our Brigade was ordered to the front, fixed bayonets, and Colonel Hunter rode along the lines directing the boys as to the charge and saying "some of us will go down but there must be no faltering," when one of our men spoke up and said, "Colonel, I want to charge by the way of that turnip patch." There was one just in front of him a little way. A funny incident occurred at Chickamauga and one that must have reflected upon the imaginations of the soldier. Our boys were retreating in rather a confused and panic stricken condition, one badly demoralized soldier went rushing up to the Assistant Surgeon saying "O my Lord, my Lord, I am shot, I am killed, Oh! Oh! Oh!" The Surgeon could not find a scratch on him. Now it was at that same battle that I got whipped. Mark Twain gave at a Confederate reunion an account of a battle he was in, in which a whole regiment more or less met one lone "Johnnie" and after a battle that fairly shook the hills, mid smoke and dust and high wrought deeds of valor they killed that poor, lone Confederate. Now had "Mark Twain" been in my place on that eventful Sabbath he had told another story. I was on the hill near McCloud Springs and was not harming or in any wise molesting the enemy. I was even unarmed, quietly sitting on my horse, just looking at them and nothing more. But it must have offended them for they turned a battery loose at me and drove me pell mell from that hill and scared me too, and I don't thank them for it to this day, so I don't. If ever I catch those same Johnnies up here in Ohio and out alone they had better watch out what I will do. How strange are the freaks of fortune in battle, some seem almost bullet proof, others a shining mark. Sunday evening September Twentieth, 1863, a soldier of Company B, stood exposed where it would seem a bird could not live and was untouched, while "little Sollic Miller" as we affectionately called him, stepping afront saying "Boys we must expose ourselves if we would save our country" fell pierced by a rifle ball. On the same day in Company C, two boys fought near each other, the one a Protestant, the other a Catholic, the former fought and prayed all day, the latter fought and swore all day; just at night fall the soldier of prayer was wounded, the one of oaths was untouched. Strange premonitions like voices from the unseen world often filled with gloomy forebodings the mind and heart of the soldier. On Saturday night at Chickamauga as the boys sat about their camp fires talking of the morrow, young Isaiah E. Skinner Company B, said "I came out unharmed today but if we fight tomorrow I am to be killed," and it was so. He sleeps where "he fighting fell." After Chickamauga John Red, Company D, said "I came safely through this battle, but the next will end my career," and he too sleeps in the beautiful Cemetery at Chattanooga.

It would require a volume to tell the tales of fun and frolic and good cheer that the "Yanks," let loose in Georgia, had in that historic campaign. "From Atlanta to the Sea." But an event or two must illustrate the whole. As we approached Milledgeville the Georgia Legislature did not meet us with music, banners and speeches of welcome, but unceremoniously retired; but a Yankee is at home everywhere and equal to all emergencies. So they took possession of the State House, organized a Legislature, repealed the ordinance of "Secession" placed the State under the Stars and Stripes and then went out singing "Rally round the Flag boys" and were gone seaward. While I have read much, seen and heard much of the doings of the "Bummer" I have never yet seen a good description of that sui generis of a soldier. He was a unique character from every stand point; he was grand, peculiar, funny and for ways that were original, and tricks that told, he far surpassed the "heathen Chinee." He had no Creator, as a Bummer he was self made, self constructed, self appointed. Now a first class Bummer was like an army mule, he had no ancestry of his own kind, and those whom he visited doubtless prayed that he might have no posterity. He, unlike "Topsy," neither "just growed" nor was he born nor was he manufactured, he had no father, no mother, he was a kind of evolution or accident growing out of the happenings of war. He was not the creation of Military tactics; he had not Scott nor Hardee, nor any other man as his father. Sonship he acknowledged to no one. He was to the army what a comet is to the "Stellar Worlds," a wandering star, a kind of military free-booter. He was a very John the Baptist to Sherman in his march to the sea and up through the Carolinas. He was the ubiquitous factor of the army. He went every where he did every thing and gave no account of his ways for he did no two alike. The make up of a Bummer was severely simple. He ordered no suits from Worth he was guiltless of style, the latest fashions troubled him not, his toilet was often neglected. But there stands one as we have seen him in all his glory, prestige and power. His hair is unkempt, his beard grown long, his face is grimy, his hands are not white like the lily, his hat is crownless, his shoes toeless, and his pants are kneeless, but not from over much prayer; his canteen is slung across his left shoulder, he has donned his cartridge box and forty rounds in it; his gun lies carelessly at a shift. For a moment he looks at the sky then at the lay of the land and now he is off on foot like a shot, whistling "Yankee Doodle." But 'tis night, and here comes our Bummer riding a fine mule or horse, with turkeys and chickens on one side, hams and potatoes on the other, fresh pork strapped to the rear of his saddle, his Springfield at half or full cocked ready for a fray. In he comes to his mess singing "I wish I was in Dixie." Such was the Bummer, such his life. In addition to largely supplying the army with rations they so swarmed all along our front, that the enemy was so bewildered by his movements as not to know where to concentrate against us. Thus the Bummer played an important part in the "March to the Sea" and up through the "Carolinas."

THE FOLLOWING LINES WERE WRITTEN BY A MEMBER OF THE SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT, EXPRESSLY FOR THIS BOOK.

ARMY OF THE CUMBERLAND.

Famous Uncle Billy Sherman led the mighty host,
With Dearly Loved Pap Thomas always at his post.
Davis, Kilpatrick, and many other brave leaders,
Made it uncomfortable for the Southern seceders.

Uncle Billy never failed to flank Johnson, Bragg, or Hood,
And in every battle, made them run, as fast as they could,
No matter what their numbers, he always made them flee,
From the battle of Resaca, till he reached the southern sea.

FOURTEENTH CORPS, ARMY OF THE CUMBERLAND.

There certainly was none any better,
Always doing as ordered, to the letter.
And truthful history must surely tell,
That the Fourteenth, did its duties well.

Dear Pap Thomas was first in command,
Then after Palmer, Davis took it in hand.
The Fourteenth, was never guilty of an error,
And to the rebels, was a holy terror.

When it advanced, the rebels moved before,
For they never could stop, the gallant "hog corps."
Its members were the bravest of the brave,
Who fought heroically, the Union to save.

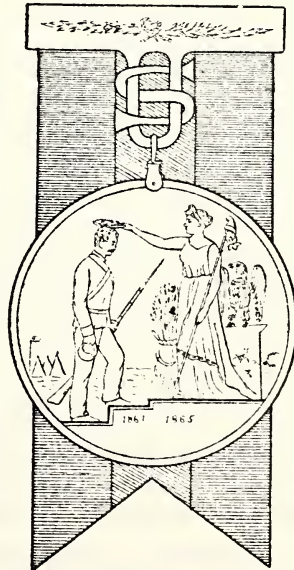

THIRD DIVISION OF THE FOURTEENTH CORPS,
ARMY OF THE CUMBERLAND.

Composed of men both brave and true,
As any who ever wore the blue.
Always ready and willing to act
When duty called, and in fact,
When there was anything to be done,
Whether hard fighting, work or fun,
They were always sure to take a hand,
And cling together, a brotherly band.

FIRST BRIGADE OF THE THIRD DIVISION OF THE FOURTEENTH CORPS.
ARMY OF THE CUMBERLAND.

This noble brigade none could excel.
Of its career, justice prompts us to tell,
That in all its battles, which were many,
It did not shirk its duty any,
And was not always found in the rear,
But often 'mid the hottest of the fire.
If there ever were, any braver men
Banded together, at a season when
It was needful to be brave and true
To each other, and their Country too,
History has failed, that fact to tell,
Hence we bid this subject now, farewell.

THE SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT, O. V. V. I. FIRST BRIGADE, THIRD DIVISION, FOURTEENTH ARMY CORPS, ARMY OF THE CUMBERLAND.

Five hundred Fairfield County boys
Left home comforts, pleasures and joys,
And joined their fate with the Seventeenth braves,
Many of whom now sleep in Southern graves.

They left wives, sweet hearts, and their father's door,
Not that they loved them less, but their Country more.

To say the brave Seventeenth Ohio,
Dealt the rebels many a hard blow,
Would truly be putting it rather mild;
It could have been led by a little child.
It aimed to drive but not to be driven,
And always advanced, when the word was given.

No matter when called on, or where ordered to go,
Ready and willing, was the Seventeenth Ohio.
Only once, were these brave boys defeated,
Then the whole army, in order, retreated.
It marched forty hundred miles or more,
And fought from the Ohio to Atlantic's shore

From August Sixty-One, to July Sixty-Five,
The Seventeenth was always wide awake, and alive
To the pressing needs of the perilous times,
And helped suppress secession, and other crimes.
And on the glorious "March to the Sea,"
Helped to set millions of poor slaves free.

The boys were always full of life and fun;
And when the day's march, or duty was done,
They would dance to the tunes from Binkley's fiddle,
Sing, play cards, tell stories, and often a riddle;
Until the drummer boy beat the tattoo,
Then the fun ceased, and to bed they would go,

Often to dream of fond loved ones at home;
And while thus dreaming, they once more would roam,
Over the haunts of their childhood's bright days,
Recalling their former gay joys and plays.
Perhaps while dreaming, of some great treat,
The signal of danger, the long roll, would beat.

Then instead of bright visions, they hear a shot,
And at once they prepare for, they know not what.
It may be, the reb's, are intent on great harm,
Or it may possibly be, only a false alarm.
Whatever the cause of alarm may be,
They are quickly in line, and ready for duty.

The dead, maimed, and discharged, always left a space,
Soon filled by recruits, sent to take their place,
Who speedily learned the hard ways of war,
From their comrades who had learned them before.
At times the fare would be fit for queens,
But often, only coffee, crackers and beans.

This would be the bill of fare for all,
And the supply at times, so very small,
That one could eat, what was given to four.
Then again there was surely plenty, and more,
So that some of it would not be tasted,
But from sheer necessity often wasted.

Through heat and dust, the boys had to go,
Again they marched through mud, rain or snow,
Often sleeping on the bare ground,
Or any other place to be found.
They often endured the greatest hardships,
Nor let a murmur escape their lips.

Again it would be the other extreme,
They then of little but sport would dream.
Every company, had at least one,
Who would always be ready for any fun.
E'en while engaged in the battles fierce strife,
Fun they would have, if it cost their life.

The brave boys would soon forget the past,
And vow they would stand it till the last
Armed rebel surrendered, or bit the dust,
Else perish in the effort, if they must.
The decisive blows were struck in Sixty-Four,
And the following Spring the war was o'er,

After the "Grand Review" at Washington,
The boys were discharged and all sent home;
Then bidding each other a hearty farewell,
Comrades scattered wide, and its hard to tell,
Whither they went, but each went his way,
Not all to meet, till the judgment day.

THE BIVOUAC.

BY C. H. ENOS, ALPHA, IOWA,

PEOPLE that read the history of the late civil war are apt to form some very curious as well as incorrect ideas of the everyday life of the soldier in the field during an active campaign. They conclude from the thrilling accounts of great battles and brilliant maneuvers that the soldiers had nothing to do but fight. For the benefit of those who have ever been blessed with enough to eat and a good place to sleep, I will endeavor to portray some of the trials and perplexities of the midnight bivouac.

What would the young men of to-day think of an employer that would forcibly drag them from bed at three or four o'clock in the morning and compel them to cook their own breakfast in a given time (or go without it), and then oblige them to carry all their cooking utensils, bedding, clothing, and three days rations, in addition to a fourteen pound musket and from forty to sixty rounds of ammunition, over twenty or thirty miles of uneven, barren country, through torrid heat or pelting rain, and at midnight turn them loose like so many animals to get their supper and find a place to sleep as best they could? And all this for the paltry sum of sixteen dollars in greenbacks, per month. I imagine they would promptly say: "None of that on my plate." Yet the veterans had this to do, in addition to exposure to shot and shell.

Now, let me explain to you what the tired soldier had to do after guns were stacked. The first thing to be found was wood and water. Imagine the delights of stumbling around in the darkness in a strange and hostile country, infested with bushwhackers watching for a chance to shoot any stray Yankees they found away from their camp, searching for fuel, and what was usually more difficult to find, pure water. Should the night prove stormy, another difficulty presented itself, that of kindling a fire. Sometimes it would take an hour or more to get the coffee boiling. But by one or two o'clock in the morning the soldier would be able to sit down to his sumptuous repast of hard tack and coffee. Then came the search for a dry, smooth place to spread his gum blanket. This found, he sank to rest with no covering but a blanket and the broad canopy of Heaven. Sometimes he was favored with two and sometimes four hours sleep, ere the shrill bangle or the noisy drum roused him from dreams of home to the stern realities of the life of danger before him.

These were only a few of the little perplexities of the veterans' life. They did not include standing two hours of the possible four on a lonely picket post, where to fall asleep meant death by the bullet of an enemy, or the decree of a court-martial.

These are details of minor importance to the citizens of to-day, but not to the old soldier.

Seventeenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

THREE YEARS' SERVICE.

This Regiment was organized at Camp Dennison, Ohio, September, 1861, to serve three years. On the expiration of its term of service the original members (except veterans) were mustered out, and the organization, composed of veterans and recruits, retained in service until July 16, 1865, when it was mustered out in accordance with orders of the War Department.

The official list of battles in which this Regiment bore an honorable part, is not yet published by the War Department; but the following list has been compiled, after careful research, during the preparation of this work:

The above list is made from ages given on muster in rolls, on file in the Adjutant General's office. Charles H. Thornton, Co. A., claims he was born April 11, 1849, which would make him the youngest private, so far as heard from, yet there may be others whose ages on muster in rolls were not correct, hence said rolls are taken for above list.

Co. G had 12 members over 40 years of age, and more than any other Co.

" H " 3 " " 40 " " less " "

" A " 63 " under 20 " " more " "

" D " 34 " " 20 " " less " "

" E " 10 " by the name of Whitacre. Five of them died and one was killed.

Total number of miles on railroads.....		1 757
Total number of miles on steamboats....		1 200
Total distance		7 348

The greatest distance marched during any month, was 355 miles, in May, 1865, and on the 5th of that month, we marched 32 miles, being the greatest distance for one day. It will be noticed that Cos. B and C, only, are credited with several marches, but no doubt the other companies marched an equal distance, at other times, but that fact is not given in the foregoing, because no record thereof was kept. It is fair to presume however, that all the companies marched about the same total distance,

RECORD OF EVENTS

FROM SEPTEMBER 6, 1861, TO JULY 20, 1865.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT, O. V. V. I.

NOTE—Unless some incident worthy of note occurred, no mention is made of days spent in camp, or on the march in the following.

1861.

The regiment was sworn into the United States service, at Camp Dennison, O., and lay there from Sept. 6th to Oct. 1st at 3 p. m. when it started, on cars for Cincinnati, O., where it crossed the Ohio river on ferry boats, to Covington, Ky.; marched to Kentucky Central Ry. depot, got aboard cattle cars, rode all night, arrived at Nicholasville, Ky., the terminus of the Ry., at 8 a. m. Oct. 2nd, went into Camp Jessamine, $\frac{1}{4}$ mile west of town, where we had our first experience, and lots of fun pitching Sibley tents. Oct. 4th, we joined the 31st and 38th O. V. I. at Camp Dick Robinson, where we drew teams (and the boys amused themselves while resting between drills, by breaking mules.) October 11th, 3 supposed spies were captured, and sent to the rear. The ladies of Richmond, Kentucky, gave us a pic-nic. Bob Lowery, Co. D., danced to Nute Pearce's violin music, for the ladies and gentlemen from Richmond, who in turn joined the boys in a social dance. October 17th, started at 9 a. m., roads muddy and hilly, teams did not arrive until midnight, hence, the boys grumbled considerably. October 19th, we waded Rockcastle river in the afternoon; it rained all day and night. October 21st, the beating of the long roll, early this morning, caused us to form into line and cross the Rockcastle river, we double quicked about a mile, to top of Wild Cat hills, and took position left of the 1st Kentucky Infantry. The rebels charged at 12 m., again in the afternoon and then at 11 p. m.; being repulsed each time, they retreated during the night, leaving their dead and wounded in our hands. October 26th, the camp was alarmed, at 11 p. m., regiment formed in line; cause of alarm, Addison Blizzard, Company G, fired a revolver. October 28th, after following the rebels, we took our position, at 10 p. m. on a hill near London, Kentucky. November 14th, marched over Wild Cat Mountain, crossed Rockcastle river at night and camped on its banks. November 15th, we quartered in the houses at Mt. Vernon, Kentucky, all night. November 16th, Mr. Reuben Emick of Lancaster, Ohio, and father of Uriah H. Emick, Company B, met the regiment at Crab Orchard, Kentucky, with a supply of blankets, etc., sent by relatives and friends, in Ohio and by the Soldiers Aid Society at Lancaster, Ohio. John D. Inskeep and George Vanhining, Company C, received a nice white woolen blanket from Mrs. Barger. Mr. Emick spent about 6 months with our regiment, and was a friend to the soldiers. November 22nd, the regiment was paid for the first time. December 2nd, passed through Somerset, Kentucky, hurried to Hodson's Ford, to guard against a flank movement, by the rebels. December 3rd, marched to Mill Springs, Kentucky, occupied a position already fortified, by the rebels, found the enemy in force. Colonel Connell met the rebel pickets, he was thrown from his horse, lost his cap and revolver, and came near being captured. We retraced our steps to Fishing Creek, arriving at about 4 a. m. December 4th very tired. December 5th, 10 p. m. we resumed march arriving at Somerset, Kentucky, at day break December 6th. December 12th, General Alvin Schoepf commanding our brigade, reviewed our regiment. December 25th, Captain Stinchcomb, Company, B., made a turkey feast for his company, they had 29 turkeys and 28 chickens. December 26th, Poor clothing was issued, part of it was returned to the quartermaster. December 28th, Company C. has been living several days on mush.

January 1st, in camp near Somerset, Kentucky, Company B. bought 10 turkeys and 20 chickens, roasted and feasted on them and corn bread. January 19th, we marched at 12 m. to reinforce General Thomas at Mill Springs, Kentucky. At 4 p. m. we waded Fishing Creek, it was armpit deep, a very rapid, cold stream. A rope had been stretched across the creek, one end attached to a tree on north bank, the other end to the still-house fence corner, on south side. The boys held to the rope with one hand, while with the other they held their accoutrements over their heads; the current was so swift it would at times force those crossing off their feet, the mud was very deep. We got to the battle field of Logan's Cross roads at 8 p. m., camped for 2 hours, 2 miles south; started again at midnight, arrived at Mill springs, 4 a. m. January 20th. February 7th, Major Ward killed a negro by the accidental discharge of a pistol or fancy gun. February 8th, we burned a great many rails in camp to-night, under protest of the owner. February 9th, quartered in water cure buildings at Crab Orchard, Kentucky, until February 12th. February 15 we received our regimental flags, near Lebanon, Kentucky. February 17th, camped in fair grounds at Springfield, Kentucky. February 22nd, fired a National salute, celebrating Washington's birthday, while we lay at Bardstown, Kentucky. February 25th, arriving at Louisville, Kentucky, we embarked on the "Neptune" and other steamboats, leaving at 4:20 p. m. February 26th for down the river, which was very high; arrived at Smithland, Kentucky February 28 at 2 p. m. March 1st, started up the Cumberland river for Nashville, Tennessee, passing Fort Donaldson at 9:30 a. m. Stopped at Clarksville, Tennessee, over night on boats and had new rifles given to us, in place of the old muskets. On March 2nd, arrived at Nashville, Tennessee. March 3rd, remained on the boats all day where we were paid off. March 20th, peach trees in bloom. March 29th, the Seventeenth, Thirty-first and Thirty-eighth Regiments O.V. V. I. were detailed to guard the wagon train, of Buell's army to Pittsburg Landing, Tennessee, and from that date until April 10th we marched to Clifton, Tennessee. Crossing Duck river on flat boats, passed through rebel General Pillow's farm, passed Mud Ridge, Summertown and Henryville, Tennessee, made corduroy road and waded through mud much of the distance. April 17th, after loading wagon train on transports, we went aboard the steamer "Continental" at 1 p. m. at Clifton, Tennessee. At 7 p. m. we left Savannah, Tennessee. At 10 p. m. tied up until 6 a. m. April 18th, we arrived at Pittsburg Landing at 2 p. m. and camped on the battle field, in the mud and woods. It rained 3 days and nights while we lay here. April 23rd, our brigade went on picket, 6 miles to the front, and on the 24th our tents and baggage were brought to us and we moved $\frac{1}{2}$ mile farther south. April 25th, we received 2 months pay. May 10th, at 12 m. the long roll beat, we marched 3 miles, closing in on the enemy, and lay in battle line. May 13th, at 10 a. m. we moved forward 4 miles. May 14th, regiment went on picket at 3 p. m. May 17th, we left camp at 8 a. m. with 2 days rations, moved forward 2 miles; Colonel Connell ordered Company B. to skirmish the woods in our front, which was done by them, driving the rebel skirmishers some distance, to an open field, where considerable skirmishing took place, and Elisha H. Hall, Company B. was shot in the right side, and Churchill McMullen in his big toe, by some rebel cavalry on the right flank of the Company. Major Ward went to recall the company, with a revolver in each hand; he found the company, and ordered it back. May 18th, we built breastworks at night, heavy skirmishing along the line. May 21st, at 8 a. m. we moved 1 mile north west. May 28th, Company K. boys and rebels had quite a talk across the lines, rebels wanted to exchange papers and whiskey for coffee. May 29th,

Corinth, Mississippi, evacuated at night, rebels blew up their magazines and destroyed all stores, not taken by them. They had wooden cannon on earth-works to fool us. May 30th, at 11 a. m. we started, leaving Corinth to our right, marching until nearly morning. May 31st, we went 6 miles south of Corinth, Mississippi. June 1st, were paid for 2 months. June 3rd, at 1 p. m. we moved two miles south of Corinth. June 4th, at 9 a. m. we started with 4 days rations for Booneville, Mississippi, crossing the Ohio and Mobile Ry., passing over swampy roads, which we corduroyed; passed through Danville, Mississippi, at 1 p. m. June 5th, we worked on roads. June 6th, at 1 p. m. we marched to Booneville, arriving at 8 p. m. without tents. June 10th, at 7 a. m. started for Corinth, Mississippi, arrived June 11th, at 4 p. m. Camped 1 mile north-east of town. June 22nd, started at 12 m. for Tusculumbia, Alabama, arriving there June 28th, at 11 a. m. after passing through Juka, Mississippi; wading Bear Creek, 4 miles west of Dixie, Alabama, and Spring Creek near Tusculumbia, Alabama. During this march the weather was very warm and roads very dusty, and on June 25th, a wind storm blew our tents down. Some of our boys were tied to a wagon for straggling. Company B. were detailed as provost guard in the town. June 30th, 36 of Company C. passed the guard line together and went to the Tennessee river to bathe; they were arrested upon returning to camp. July 4th, at 6 a. m. Captain Stinchcomb, Company B. read the Declaration of Independence, made a speech and treated his company to lemonade "with a fly in it." In the afternoon speeches were made by Generals McCook and Fry, and Colonels Steadman, Walker and Connell, and all had a fine time. At this time only 3 Sibley tents were in each company, 2 for privates, 1 for officers. July 6th, most of Company C. went to the Tennessee river for a swim, Jose H. Curl, Wm. A. Bell and John N. Winner, came near drowning, Jose H. Curl the nearest. July 7th, Company commanders ordered to have 4 roll calls daily, at irregular hours, and all absentees reported to the officer of the day, for fatigue duty. July 16th, George Harper, Wm. Hankins and Jno. Owens Company C. were put on 6 days guard for leaving the regiment while marching, and going to camp ahead of it. July 18th, Lieutenant Brandt, Company C. treated his company to a barrel of ale. July 23rd, Company B. left Tusculumbia, Alabama, for Decatur, Alabama, after passing Jonesborough, Lawrence County, Alabama, and Courtland, Alabama, arrived on the 25th at 2 p. m.; we crossed the Tennessee river on a small ferry boat, were 2 days at it. The regiment all got together again on north side. July 27th, at 3 a. m. we started for Huntsville, Alabama, after passing through Mooresville, Alabama, arrived July 28th. Left July 29th, at 6 a. m. for Winchester, Tennessee, where we arrived on August 1st, going into camp 1 mile north, after passing through New Market, Alabama, and Salem, Franklin County, Tennessee. Left August 7th at 4 a. m., passed Decherd and Pelham, Tennessee, and camped on Elk river near town August 8th. August 10th, Company B. with details from other companies, went on a scout over the Cumberland Mountains; lots of peaches were obtained. August 11th, Companies B. E. G. and H. went on a scout and at night came home with Colonel Cupp's cavalry, having 24 cattle, 36 sheep and 5 rebels who had been guarding them. August 24th, at 7 a. m. moved through Pelham, Tennessee and camped without tents, as all our baggage except 1 blanket apiece, had been sent to Decherd, Tennessee. August 25th, we took position on the eastern slope of a very rocky hill, 3 miles from the mountains, in the stoniest place we had yet been, expecting an attack; we had to roll stones a long time to get a place to lie down. August 27th, Company B. went foraging. August 29th, moved back $\frac{1}{2}$ mile, and cleared off a good camp. August 30th, at daylight we started without breakfast for Winchester, Tennessee. The regimental brass band was discharged at Winchester, Tennessee today and Captain Stinchcomb Company B. treated his company, this being the first anniversary of its enlistment. August 31st, our brigade detailed to guard a supply train of 1500 wagons, back to Murfreesborough, Tennessee; arrived there September 2nd. September 5th, left for Nashville, Tennessee; arrived September 7th. and camped on vacant lots in rear of Military Academy. September 9th we guarded a bridge across the Cumberland river; we were relieved by the Eighteenth U. S. I. September 11th. moved camp to South-west side of the hill, where there was plenty of shade. September 15th. we started for Louisville, Kentucky; Major Wards horse got loose last night. run over some stacked guns and run a bayonet into himself, killing him. Only 1 wagon allowed now. to 2 companies. After passing through Bowling Green, Kentucky. where we got a good wetting, as all tents were left at Nashville. Tennessee, crossed Barren river, Kentucky, and camped near Cave City, Kentucky; on the 20th. we were ordered at night. to have 3 days cooked rations in our haversacks, and be ready to march at day-light in the morning. We had but little meat. no salt or bread. had some coffee, fresh beef and flour issued to us, which was to be made into bread some way. The boys mixed the flour with water, then old tin plates, boards, flat rails and chips were used to bake, (or rather dry,) the dough on. Some twisted the dough around the iron ram-rods of their guns and dried it in the fire. No salt, plenty of dirt, half dried or burned. the boys called the stuff sinkers, and it was an appropriate name for it. The beef was cut in pieces, put on the ram-rods, or forked sticks and broiled; some was raw, some burned. It was midnight before the boys got through with it, and it was all we had to eat until September 23rd, when at night, the same experience was repeated with flour and water but no meat. Passing through Elizabethtown, Kentucky. September 24th. camped 3 miles north of town. and September 25th. camped on the Ohio river, below Louisville, Kentucky, and on the 26th. camped in suburbs of city. On this same march green field corn was a luxury. roasted with husks on, and apple-jack was found occasionally and enjoyed. September 27th. Chaplain Fullerton, having resigned, started for home. September 28th. we received 4 months pay. Started south October 1st, with only 1 wagons for the regiment. October 2nd, 2 companies of each regiment of our brigade. were detailed as skirmishers, our Company B. one, and when near Shepherdsville, Kentucky. they encountered the rebels, driving them through town, and then taking shelter in the houses. until the brigade arrived. October 3rd to the 8th. we were going towards Perryville, Kentucky. weather was very hot and roads dusty. The battle of Perryville was fought on the 8th. we were in sight of it but not actively engaged. Water was very scarce; the boys took turns in going about 5 miles to a spring. loaded with canteens, and fighting the rebels away from the spring; both federal and rebel troops got water there. October 10th. Company B. were on patrol duty in Perryville, Kentucky. October 15th. a barrel of whiskey was captured at Crab Orchard, Kentucky. and issued to the boys. October 26th. in the night, while we lay on Rolling Fork, a branch of the Kentucky river, without tents, it snowed about 5 inches. November 9th. at Tunnel Hill, our first recruits came. From November 11th. when we went into camp near Gallatin, Tennessee, until December 16th when we left, the following occurred. Nov. 13th. Mrs. Col. Connell, Mrs. Col. Moore and Miss Butterfield visited us. Nov. 22nd. Company C. and others. went on a scout towards Lebanon, Tennessee, and back: November 26th and 27th. we went on a scout to Pilot Knob, Sumner County, Tennessee, and back. December 4th. Mrs. Col. Connell and Mrs. Col. Moore started for their homes in Ohio. December 16th. 2 companies from each regiment in our brigade, detailed to guard a wagon train to Nashville, Tennessee, Company B. was one of the two from our regiment, the balance of the brigade went by cars. December 23rd. we went out foraging towards Gallatin, Tennessee, and back, had about 400 wagons, all were loaded with hay, oats, corn and corn blades. December 24th. at night when all were asleep, the boys tied a bell to an old gray mare's tail, she ran through camp badly scared, and badly frightening every one. December 25th. Whiskey was issued and some of Company C. and K. boys got into a fight, using hatchets, axes, picks, spades, and clubs. One of Company C. and Amos Shesler, Company K., had their heads badly cut. December 28th. we started toward Murfreesborough, Tennessee, on Nolensville Pike. December 29th, we marched all night, through the rain part of the time, through cedar woods, over stony roads, across the country to the Murfreesborough pike, arriving at 3. a. m. December 30th, 3½ miles south-east of La Vergne, Tennessee. Colonel Walker, who commanded our brigade, came riding into camp, with his hat off, yelling at the top of his voice, "get ready my lads." In 5 minutes the brigade was in line and quickly formed in battle line across the pike facing to La Vergne, skirmishers were thrown out in front and on the flanks, the brigade moved forward to La Vergne hoping to capture the rebel cavalry who were burning a train of 132 wagons, loaded with camp equipage and stores belonging to General McCooks corps, but the enemy had flown. The Battle of Stone River began to-day, December 31st, we moved towards the battle field, at Stewarts Creek we halted and formed a hollow square, expecting to be attacked by rebel cavalry, coming from the woods on the right of the road beyond the creek, but they did not come. During this forenoon, there was a perfect stream of stragglers, and wounded from the battle field, and the road was full of teams retreating, many teamsters and soldiers panic stricken, all going towards Nashville, Tennessee; Major Ward tried to stop the panicstricken soldiers, they could not be stopped however and he told them in a loud voice, "Go home and tell your sweethearts that you ran off of the battle field," he also told them "I would not give a cup full of cold water for a million such soldiers." Major Ward did not know what fear was, and did not understand it in others. We reached the battle field about 2:30 p. m. taking our position on the right of the Murfreesborough pike, in the woods, where the heaviest fighting had been done. The general engagement had ceased, but more or less firing by the artillery of both sides continued. During the forenoon the whole right wing of our army, commanded by Major General Alexander McCook, had been driven back with heavy loss. About sundown, the rebels charged on some of our forces, on our right, but were repulsed with considerable loss; this occured in plain view of us and not far off, some of our regiment went over and took part in routing the rebel cavalry. We bivouacked on the stony ground, without fires most of the night, among the slain, no tents, but few blankets, night very cold and much suffering among the men. All baggage and stores had been ordered to Nashville, leaving the army without food.

We threw up breastworks January 1st, and were on picket, the men nearly froze, as it was very cold, and no fires permitted on picket line. Aspect of affairs rather gloomy. Preparations for a retreat, we act only on the defensive. ½ pint of beans and 2 spoonful of molasses only, was issued to each of us, during the night. January 2nd, nothing to eat but a few beans, which we cooked in tin cups, and a little molasses. To our left flesh was cut from horses and mules that had been killed in battle, cooked and eaten by the hungry troops. About 9 p. m. we received 2 days rations from Nashville, Tennessee. This afternoon the left wing of our army, and part of the center, drove the charging rebels from the field with great slaughter, with grape and canister from our batteries, and musketry; the cannonading was most terrific, seeming to shake the earth to its center. At sun down our brigade advanced about 500 yards, laid down on our bellies and crawled a few yards, our artillery firing over us all the time; we fired on the enemy as we lay on the ground, then returned to our breastworks. "No. 9" was the rallying cry. About twenty men wounded to-day, in our brigade; none killed. In the night Captain Inskeep, Company C. and Captain C. L. Williams of the Thirty-first Regiment O. V. I. with 3 men, went out between the picket lines, near the rebel pickets, and got one Wallace of the Forty-fourth Indiana Volunteers, who was wounded and had lain on the field for 4 days, chilled and starved nearly to death, and carried him back within our lines. January 3rd, rained all day until night, then ceased. A brigade on the left center, made a night attack on the rebel fortifications and took them; the fight lasted about an hour and was very hard. About noon Captain Inskip Company C crawled out to a wounded man belonging to the First Regiment O. V. I. who had been calling for help, and with the aid of 3 comrades, carried him off the field. Rebels retreated during the night, leaving a great many sick and wounded to fall into our hands. January 4th, large parties detailed to gather up and bury the killed, groups of from 50 to 150 being gathered together and buried. January 5th, the men took off their shoes and socks, rolled pants up and waded Stone river; the water was about 3 feet deep, 50 yards wide and very cold. Jan. 8th, our wagons joined us again, and the suffering for food, blankets and shelter is over for the present. We lay in camp near Murfreesborough, Tennessee, until March 13th, and while there some of Company A. and F. pulled down a house near camp, carried the whole floor into camp, used it to dance on, and were arrested Jan. 16th for doing it. Wm. Comstock Company K. purposely shot his thumb off, while we lay here. January 25th, a middle aged man came to our camp from General Davis division; he sang songs, sold postage stamps, and his printed songs to the boys; he was afterwards killed while trying to run the picket line, and was found to be a rebel spy. We guarded a train to Nashville, Tennessee, and back from, January 30th to February 3rd. The boys stole a barrel of whiskey on the night of February 2nd, and on the 3rd the regiment was inspected to find the guilty, but the boys were too cute to be caught. February 10th, Company F. were all arrested and sent to the guard house, for refusing to tell on one of their men, who bored a hole in a log, put a heavy charge of powder therein, plugged it up and fired it off, contrary to orders. They were finally let off, with a lecture from Colonel Connell, on the duties of a soldier. February 13th, Company D. on guard 2 days, for punishment, for refusing to "fall in" to guard Company F. on the 10th inst. February 21st, Noah Booker, Company F. was tried by court martial, charge, absence without leave, conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline, and March 12th, he was drummed out of camp in the presence of our brigade, with one side of his head shaved, by order of said court martial; he stole shirts from Colonel Ward, a box of wine from Henry Springer, the regimental sutler, and was a bad one on general principles. March 13th, shelter, or dog tents drawn for the regiment, but the officers refused to receive them, great dissatisfaction among the boys about them. March 14th, we marched westward, arriving on the 15th at Triune, Tennessee, camped on a nice place; we are now on the extreme right flank of our army. Here we built a fort and a line of breastworks. April 7th, we went on a scout to Eagleville, Tennessee, and returned. April 12th, Chaplain Gardner preached the first time for us. April 16th, In the afternoon we played football in camp, the right wing against the left. Chaplain Gardner and all hands took part; the Chaplain outran every man in the regiment, the game lasted until dark. April 28th, Alf. Burnett performed, in the sutler's tent, for the benefit of our regiment. May 9th, Springfield rifles, Caliber Fifty-eight, pattern 1861, were issued to us in place of old ones. May 13th, darkey footracing in camp, lots of fun for the boys. May 21st Company B. detailed as provost guard at division headquarters, for General Schofield, remained there until June 9th, when it returned to the regiment. May 29th, Company C. and others started at 8 a. m. out foraging, went westward, towards Franklin, Tennessee, returned to camp at 7 p. m. very tired. June 7th, our brigade started at 6 a. m. on a scout towards Franklin, Tennessee and returned in the evening. Our pickets were attacked several times by the rebels, during our stay at Triune, Tennessee. June 24th, we broke camp at 6 a. m. went to Salem, Tennessee, then across the country to the Shelbyville pike, 10 miles from Murfreesborough, Tennessee, filed left, crossed the Chattanooga railroad, it rained all day and night. June 25th, started at 7 a. m. went towards the Manchester pike; rain and mud. June 26th, rained all day, our brigade charged the rebels at Hoovers Gap, across the valley, under fire of a battery and a brigade of rebel infantry, on the left flank, and a front and flank fire from rebel skimishers, we forced them to abandon their position; 24 men were killed and wounded out of our regiment. Companies C., G. and H. were deployed as skimishers all the afternoon, in front and right flank, of our brigade. Captain Inskeep, Company C. took a squad of men, went out in front and drove in a large drove of cattle, sheep and hogs, during the afternoon. June 27th, we guarded an immense wagon train to Manchester, Tennessee, across Duck river, Tennessee, and waded a creek near town. General Rosecrans, staff, escort and train passed us; the boys cheered him; he waved his hat and pointed forward. June 28th, all tents and surplus baggage sent to rear, a lot of green leather taken from a tanyard near camp, by the boys. In the evening we went towards Tullahoma, Tennessee. July 1st, we moved to the front at 8 a. m.; passed through Tullahoma, the rebels left many tents and some heavy guns, with their carriages burned. July 2nd, Reveille at 2 a. m., started at daylight, roads very bad. We formed line of battle near Elk river, the enemy retreated, burning bridge over Elk river, which is very high and swift from recent rains. Rations very scarce with us. July 3rd, a very heavy rain, roads fearfully bad. We forded Elk river at Marsh's Ferry, it was arm-pit deep, and ran so swiftly the men could scarcely keep on their feet. Ambulances were driven in to break the force of the current. Rations still scarce, and the boys do some foraging. July 4th, A few crackers were obtained to-day, and at night it rained hard. July 5th, 100 men and 10 officers from our regiment sent out foraging, they got some potatoes, meat and a few beans. July 9th, we got rations to-day and Springer, the sutler, arrived. For the past 16 days it has rained most all the time, and the mud is beyond description. July 18th, moved camp near Winchester, Tennessee, close to fine springs that we camped by last August. Part of the regiment was paid off, and balance paid on July 19th, by Major Phelps. July 25th, Colonel Connell took command of our brigade. August 8th, Captains Stinchcomb and Ogden, Lieutenant Thatcher and Sergeants Strode, Bird, Van Horn, Foster, Titler and private Call, started for Ohio, to get conscripts to fill our regiment to the maximum number allowed by law. August 10th, went on top of Sand Mountain and camped at University Hill, near railroad, an awfully hot day. During our stay here we had very heavy thunder storms; one on August 15th drove us out of the woods into an open field. August 16th, started at 11 a. m., heading for East Tennessee; passed through Decherd, Tennessee. About noon a very heavy thunder storm occurred; lightning striking several times near us. August 17th, Reveille at 2:30 a. m., started at 7 a. m. went 1 mile and then halted, for General Reynolds troop to cross the mountain. August 18th, climbed Cumberland mountains, 2 miles to top; very sultry; marched alongside the Tracy City rail road 6 miles, fine spring on top of mountain, but scarcely any inhabitants for miles around. August 19th, descended the mountain, found plenty of peaches, afternoon quite hot, camped near a fine spring in Sweeden's Cove. August 22nd, Crossed Battle Creek. Major Butterfield, Captain Clark and Lieutenant St. John, returned from Ohio, whither they had been on leave of absence. August 26th, Company A. were excused from camp duty for one week, for having the best quarters, on inspection, by Adjutant Davis. August 30th, this p. m. we marched to the Tennessee River, roads very dusty, camped at mouth of Battle Creek, and at the foot of Prospect mountain, about 2 miles above Bridgeport, Alabama. August 31st, we crossed the Tennessee river in dugouts, canoes, rafts, on rails, boards, logs and anything that would float. Horses were forced into the river and firmly held by men at the sides of the dug outs and canoes, and made to swim as long as they could, then float the rest of the way, from 2 to 6 taken at each trip of each canoe and dug out. Our regiment crossed in fore part of night, all but the Field and Staff and their attaches, these remained on the right bank of the river. Wagons all sent to Bridgeport, Alabama, hence we have no tents and but little to eat. September 3rd, we marched to Niojack Cave, of Shell Mound, Tennessee; great saltpetre works here worked by the rebels; many of our boys went quite a ways into the cave. September 5th, started at 5 a. m., passed through Hog Jaw valley, ascended the mountain, passed coal mines, camped on top of the mountain in Georgia. September 6th, marched east 9 miles, descended the mountain and camped in Sligo Valley. September 10th, marched up Lookout valley, Lookout range on one side and Sand Mountain range on other; passed through Trenton, Georgia. September 11th, General Negley was attacked in Chattanooga valley and driven back, we go to his aid and camp at foot of Lookout Mountain. September 12th, early in the morning we began ascending the mountain, all trains left behind; very warm and dusty; this is the highest and steepest mountain we have yet crossed; arrived in Chattanooga valley about 10 a. m. At 2 p. m. we made a reconnoissance to the front, went to Chattanooga creek, where Negley was engaged yesterday, found no enemy in force, returned to our 10 a. m. halting place, after dark. September 14th, started at 7 a. m. moved slowly and cautiously, rebels not far away in force; we camped square in front of Dug's Gap, where the rebels were. September 15th, at 3 a. m. we were in line of battle, a fine spring near camp, wagons joined us, plenty of wood and forage. September 17th, started at 7 a. m. went to our left, and camped on left bank of Chickamauga Creek, near a large cornfield, ground very rocky, could scarcely find room to lie down. This morning the enemy's cavalry attacked General Reynolds, and threw a few shells this afternoon, but were repulsed. September 18th, Teams came up this a. m., cannonading to our left this afternoon. We marched all night, except two hours the men slept on their arms, by the roadside. We were continually starting and halting. The whole country was alive with soldiers, all pushing forward as rapidly as the narrow road would permit, towards Chattanooga, Tennessee. September 19th, our division was on the left and became fiercely engaged about 9 a. m.; both sides lost heavily, and the rebels were repulsed. We were in one charge with the Ninth Ohio Infantry which retook a Fifteenth United States Artillery Battery, which had fallen into the enemy's hands. In the evening our division moved to the right, and about 11 p. m. took position in line of battle, in the woods in front of Mission Ridge, on level ground. Sept. 20th, all knew a great battle was to be fought to day, and the storm burst in the forenoon, striking the line to our left first, swept around, took us with a violence of a tornado, scattering our forces, after a gallant resistance. Our forces fell back to the hills in our rear, rallied, and fought with desperate valor, overwhelming numbers, until dark, when we all withdrew to Rossville, Georgia, and took a new position; we lost heavily in men and material, but the rebels' loss of men was certainly greater. The lack of ammunition was a factor in compelling our troops to fall back. The fragments of our brigade bivouacked in rear of Rossville, Georgia. To-night moved three miles towards Chattanooga, Tennessee. The rebels got nearly all our knapsacks and blankets and the nights were cool. September 21st, forenoon spent in forming our lines, organizing and massing our forces. We lay in waiting all day for the enemy, who followed us, but made no heavy demonstrations against us. As soon as it was dark, our troops began to move towards Chattanooga, Tennessee. We covered the retreat of our army, rested a few hours on the way and got into town about day light on the 22nd. The enemy followed us closely and menaced us all day, throwing shells this afternoon. Our forces threw up defences, which were never thrown up more rapidly, nor did men ever work with more energy and determination. Before night we were so well fixed that we wished the enemy would attack us but he did not. Barrels of flour and everything available went into our breastworks to-day. September 27th, a flag of truce sent out to the enemy's lines, and arrangement made to bring our wounded in off the battle field. September 28th, a long train of ambulances were delivered into the rebels hands, for the purpose of conveying our wounded to our lines. September 29th, about night the ambulances began to return, when many of our men gathered along the road, looking for their wounded friends therein; some were gratified, many disappointed. Some of the wounded complained of receiving bad treatment at the hands of the rebels, others say they were used well. September 30th, another train of ambulances went out the same way, returning October 1st. Very dusty for the past week or so. October 18th, this afternoon Mr. Murdock of Cincinnati, Ohio, gave the soldiers an exhibition of his skill in reading. It has rained 3 days and 4 nights since the 11th inst. with only short intermissions, also rained to-day. One day lately, the rebels shelled us nearly all day and night, but with little damage. The rebels burned a wagon train loaded with clothing and ammunition, a few days ago, between this point and Stevenson, Alabama; they killed a great many mules and captured a few men, at the same time. The enemy appears in very large force in our front and is bold in showing himself; his tents by day and camp fires by night, in large numbers are very conspicuous. On the 13th inst. an election in our regiment, resulted 277 for Brough, 1 for Valandingham, and this is a fair index of the vote for the whole army. The army has been reorganized, the Third and Fourth Division Fourteenth Army Corps have been consolidated, Brigadier General Baird commanding. Our brigade composed of the Eleventh, Seventeenth, Thirty-first, Thirty-sixth, Eighty-Ninth and Ninety-second Ohio regiments, and the Eighty-Second Indiana Infantry, Brigadier General Turchin commanding. October 19th, the Seventeenth and Thirty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry and Eighty-Second Indiana moved camp this p. m. to the right and rear, near the large depot; our brigade ordered on picket for tomorrow. October 26th, General Hazen's and our brigade, were selected, to take the enemy by surprise at Brown's Ferry and get possession of that crossing, which would secure to the army a shorter and better line of communication, with our base of supplies; our brigade marched under cover of the night, to the Tennessee river opposite Browns Ferry, and remained there until morning. In the mean time 1,200 picked men from Hazen's Brigade, were to bring down the river, under cover of the night and fog, 50 pontoon boats, to furnish the means for crossing the river next morning. Everything was so admirably planned and skillfully executed, that just at the peep of day October 27th, the boats arrived, after floating down the river under the rebel's guns and noses, without being discovered by them, and in the twinkling of an eye the 1,200 were landed and poured their well directed fire into the surprised and panic stricken rebels. The boats were quietly rowed to our side of the river and our brigade leaped on board, under the fire of the rebels. In ten minutes the river was black with masses of men, and in 25 minutes, from the time the first gun was fired, all of both brigades, were across the river and on the hills that skirted the banks. The rebels had one brigade of infantry and a battery at the ferry, sufficient to have cut us all to pieces, had they not been surprised. Their musketry firing soon ceased, but their battery kept firing for 2 or 3 hours. We at once fortified our position, anticipating an attack, but we soon saw the rebels moving rapidly out of the valley. We captured some prisoners, a few horses and considerable forage, our entire loss was less than 30 in killed and wounded. The pontoon boats, were soon in position, as a bridge across the river. Our position was on a sharp back bone of a ridge, October 28th, immediately after noon, General Hooker with the Eleventh and Twelfth corps from the army of the Potomac, were seen to enter Lookout valley, carrying the Star Spangled Banner, to join us and help us lift the siege. The rebels on Lookout mountain shelled his troops, but did little harm. Our joy was almost uncontrollable, on seeing these veterans, coming to our relief. About midnight, General Hooker with one of his brigades, took one of the rebels positions, after a terrific fight of nearly 2 hours. October 30th, the steam boat, "First Rock", slipped by the rebel batteries, in the morning, on its way to Bridgeport, Alabama, for supplies. In the evening a boat load of supplies arrived at Kelly's Ford, a few miles below Brown's Ferry. It rained hard all day and night, making it very uncomfortable for those of us, who had neither tents nor a sufficiency of clothing. We remained on these high, steep, rocky, sharp hills until the morning of November 3rd, when we recrossed the river on the pontoon bridge about 1 a. m. and went into our former camp. Nov. 11th, paymaster Phelps began to pay us for 4 months, finished on November 12th. This was the foggiest morning the most of us ever saw; a man could not be distinguished 20 feet away. November 14th, Colonel Connelt left for Ohio, having resigned to become Senator in the General Assembly, of Ohio. November 16th, began drilling in the bayonet exercise. During much of our stay here, rations and fuel have been extremely scarce. One fourth rations and less at times. Some of the boys gathered up the corn left on the ground by rebel mules, made hominy out of it and ate it. Parched corn and even mouldy crackers were eaten. The boys would go where the cattle were butchered, and often fight with each other, for the small bits of meat, the butchers might happen to leave on the hide's, while skinning the beeves. There was no part of the beef wasted, that it was possible for a human to eat. November 19th, our brigade on picket, our regiment on outpost, our sentinel line on Chattanooga creek, south of town, the rebel line on the other bank, a few yards distant. For several days movements of troops have been active, several thousand men of the army of the Mississippi, under Major General Sherman arrived; this command was quietly marched up the river, opposite the rebel right, crossed the river near the mouth of Chickamauga creek. The Eleventh corps under General Howard crossed the river at Chattanooga, and moved to our left. On the afternoon of November 23rd, our whole army moved in front of the rebel position, which extends from Tennessee River, the northern terminus of Mission Ridge, to the crest and western slope of Lookout Mountain; the rebels had their whole line fortified, with successive lines of rifle pits, and the crest of the Ridge covered with batteries. General Hazen's brigade, supported by other troops attacked and carried Indian Hill, directly in front and midway, between our Fort Wood and Mission Ridge. While this was being done, the guns of Forts Negley and Wood, poured a shower of shells into the enemy on different points of his line. Our line was advanced all along the center. Our regiment had been working on Fort Negley until about 3 p.m. when we were called in to go with our brigade which was on the right of the troops in the valley. We marched out just before night; the night was cold and all had a cool time of it. Our pickets were so close together that they could hear each other whisper. November 24th, General Hooker had his famous battle above the clouds on Lookout Mountain, whipping the rebels handsomely, taking many prisoners and getting possession of the Mountain. The fight lasted until after midnight, and part of it we could plainly see; a grand sight it was too. Sherman operated in good style on our left, today. Our part of the line not engaged, excepting that the artillery in fort Wood threw a few shells over our heads. November 25th, last night the rebels left Lookout Mountain and withdrew their left to Mission Ridge. Early this morning the batteries of both armies opened and the infantry on our left was engaged. The firing gradually increased until about 3 or 4 p.m. when the whole force in front of Mission Ridge, charged the rebel position and triumphantly carried line after line of rifle pits, against showers of shells and bullets, until the crest of the ridge was reached and the rebels completely routed and driven from the field. We captured over 50 cannon and several thousand prisoners. Major Butterfield was wounded in foot. Just before the assault our brigade was moved to the left and went up the Ridge directly in front of Fort Wood. This was the grandest sight we ever saw. November 26th, pursued the rebels, Company C, skirmishers took 16 prisoners. We slept on the banks of the Chickamauga. November 27th, our division arrived at Ringgold, Georgia, just as Osterhaus drove the rebels off White Oak Mountain and we stayed here until November 29th when we returned to Chattanooga, tearing up railroads and bridges on the way back. December 2nd, we moved our camp on to Mission Ridge near Bragg's late headquarters, Captain Leo Noles, Company L., was among the first to enter the house thus used, and he found on a table a merschaum pipe with the inscription carved thereon, that the ladies of Columbia, South Carolina had presented it to General Bragg. December 1st, grand review of our troops, by Generals Grant, Thomas and others. December 17th, Captain Inskeep of Company C.

was appointed recruiting officer for the veterans of our regiment. December 24th, Captain Inskeep took 24 of Company C. to the front to obtain supplies for a Christmas dinner, they went to Chickamauga Creek, found no boat in which to cross, made a raft, but it would not work then they went to the bridge and crossed; kept near the Knoxville Ry. until reaching Tanners Station, 10 miles from Chattanooga; there they bought geese and chickens from Mrs. Evans, and returned to camp at 7 p. m. December 25th, Company C. had a good dinner of the fowls obtained yesterday. Some of the officers of our regiment got drunk this evening and raised a general muss. December 26th, veteran recruiting going on lively. For the next three days it was very rainy, then on the night of December 31st, it turned very cold. During the month, Henry Canode and Woodson W. Brock Company K. went into the country for something to eat, and paid a woman $1.25 for each skillet full of corn bread, she made for them, without salt, just meal and water, mixed and baked. Brock shot a "Yellow Hammer", on their way back to camp and feasted on it.

January 1st, this was the cold New Years sure. January 2nd, 300 Veterans of our Regiment mustered by Lieutenant J. Dick, Eighteenth, U. S. I. January 7th, Major C. J. F. Allen, paid $70,000 to the veterans of our Regiment. January 15th, the first train of cars entered Chattanooga since we occupied it, and we drew full rations again, the first time, for a long while. January 16th, orders came for the veterans to go home on thirty days furlough. January 17th, at 1 a. m., the veterans of our Regiment left Mission Ridge for Ohio, left Chattanooga at daylight in box cars, for Nashville. The cars ran off the track twice, before we got to Bridgeport Alabama, but as they ran very slowly, no one was hurt. We traveled all night, packed uncomfortably close in the box cars, arriving in Nashville about 11 a. m., January 18th, where we quartered in the old gun factory. January 19th, we left the barracks, before daylight for the railroad depot, and started on train at 7.15 a. m. for Louisville, Kentucky, where we arrived about dark and quartered in barracks No. 1. January 20th, those of our Regiment who did not veteranize, and were left on Mission Ridge, went to Chattanooga. The recruits, who could not become veterans, under the law, which required two years service, were temporarily put into the 11th O. V. I. and the others in 92d O. V. I. We crossed the Ohio river a little after noon, into Jeffersonville, Ind., where we halted for an hour or so; while halting a number of the boys got very drunk, and gave considerable trouble. A little before night we started for Seymour, Ind., arrived there 10 p. m. We bivouacked under the wood shed of railway. Very cold, boys burned wood freely. Jan. 21st, at 10 a. m., we left on train for Cincinnati, O., where we arrived at 6 p. m. and quartered in barracks, corner Sixth and Elm streets. January 22nd, the doings of 300 veteran soldiers, turned loose, in a city like Cincinnati, with plenty of money, can better be imagined than described. The boys presented a sword, to Colonel Ward, at the Burnet House. January 23rd, went to Camp Dennison this a. m. and into the barracks there. Mind in great abundance; it was awful. Company E. went home this evening. January 25th, the balance of the Regiment went to their homes, some via, Columbus, others to Lancaster, Ohio. February 20th, Captain Haines Company C. gave the soldiers a magnificent supper, at the old Hotel in West Middleburgh, O., a large party of ladies and gentleman were present, a cotillon party in the evening. February 22nd, a farewell party given to Company C. by the citizens of East Liberty, Ohio, in the Masonic Hall, this evening; soldiers and citizens enjoyed it. February 24th, the Regiment assembled at Camp Dennison, Ohio, all but Company C. which was detained until the 26th, by a railroad accident near West Liberty, Ohio, and a delay at Xenia, Ohio. March 2nd, We left at 10 a. m. for Cincinnati, Ohio. Halted there until 4 p. m. took cars for Seymour, Indiana; on road all night. Had an accident on the O. & M. Railway, near North

Vernon, Indiana, several men hurt, among them John W. Boerstler, Company B, was killed, two cars smashed. Arrived at Seymour, about 9 a.m. March 3rd, left at once for Jeffersonville, Indiana; arrived there about 3 p. m., crossed the Ohio river to Louisville, Kentucky, quartered in barracks No. 1 for the night. The boys had the biggest drunk of their lives. March 4th, a busy day to keep the boys in due bounds. About 4 p. m. we started on train for Nashville, Tennessee, all but Companies B., G. and H., who stayed for want of transportation, until the 6th. The seven Companies arrived in Nashville, March 5th, about 10 a. m., after riding all night, crowded uncomfortably close, in box cars. Quartered in barracks No. 2, a building formerly used for a female college. March 6th, the seven companies started at 4 p. m. for Chattanooga, Tennessee, cars packed inside and many rode on top; rode all night. Companies B., G. & H. left Louisville, Kentucky, arrived in Nashville, Tennessee, quartered in the Zollicoffer Hotel. March 7th, the seven companies arrived, at noon, in Chattanooga, Tennessee, just 50 days since leaving it for home. Marched to our old camp on Mission Ridge. We drew only 5 wall tents for the line officers, hence the officers of every two companies, counting from the right, to occupy one tent. Companies C. and K. come together. March 9th, Companies B., G. and H. left Nashville, and arrived at Chattanooga, on the 10th, marched to Mission Ridge and joined the others there. March 10th, Regimental commander ordered that the companies should take their places in line, according to the rank of captains, this pleases some and displeases others. March 11th, started at 1 p. m. for Ringgold, Georgia, camped on the left bank of Chickamauga Creek. March 12th, resumed our march at 7 a. m., crossed Chickamauga Creek, and arrived at Ringgold about noon, camped on a hill, about a mile west of town, on left bank of the creek, plenty of spring water. Here we rejoined our brigade. March 13th, Chaplain Gardner preached for first time lately. March 20th, he preached again at 3 p. m. March 22th, eight inches of snow fell, last night and up to dark today. April 3rd, Chaplain Gardner preached at 10 a. m. and 3 p. m. April 5th, at 3 p. m. Brigadier General Turchin drilled our brigade, for two hours and the boys got tired. April 7th, our Division reviewed at 1 p. m. by General Thomas and staff, besides several other Major and Brigadier Generals. April 10th, at 10 a. m. Chaplain Gardner again held services. April 12th, three Regiments of federal cavalry came in today, to reinforce us. April 13th, Major Stinchcomb had been in command of the Regiment until today, when Colonel Ward arrived after an absence of over six months, on account of wounds received at Chickamauga. April 15th, the Thirty-First O. V. V. I. returned from their veteran furlough. April 25th, General Kilpatrick, arrived about this time and took command of the cavalry forces here. May 1st, Chaplain Gardner preached at 10:30 a. m. and in the evening. May 4th, all surplus baggage ordered ready to move to rear. Major Stinchcomb's resignation as accepted, was received today. May 5th, this a. m. all but one wall tent, all desks, all books, all extra clothing and other extra baggage were sent to the rear. Major Stinchcomb left for Ohio. May 6th, every officer, except the Colonel, has to come to "dog tents." This evening we got orders to be ready to march at daylight tomorrow morning, with three days cooked rations in haversacks and 60 rounds of ammunition, to each man. May 7th, at 6 a. m. we marched across Chickamauga Creek to Ringgold, Georgia, halted until 9:30 a. m. when we moved through the gap in Taylor's Ridge, toward Tunnel Hill, passed through Tunnelton, Georgia, saw large number of rebel "paddies" stuffed with fodder, on their late picket posts. We had charge of the ammunition and ambulance trains. Weather very warm. May 8th, about noon, we moved southerly on Villanow Gap road, to Cox's house, where we stopped for the night, on a ridge near the road. August 9th, evening found our brigade in front of Buzzard Roost Gap, within range of the rebel artillery, on Rocky Face mountain. The rebel fortifications seem to be extensive and formidable. Captain Ogden, Company I, started for home. May 10th, rebels shelled our camp in afternoon, compelling us to retire under cover. There are about 125,000 men here in our army, consisting of the Fourth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth, Sixteenth, Twentieth and Twenty-Third corps. May 12th, we marched at daylight, in advance of our corps, went south westerly, passed through Snake Creek Gap in the afternoon. The Twelfth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth, Sixteenth, Twentieth and Twenty-Third corps, went through this gap, flanking the rebels out of Buzzard Roost Gap. May 13th, at night we marched nearly all the time, through the woods to find our place in the battle line, shifted from place to place. Rebels evacuated Dalton, Georgia, and took a new position yesterday, on a range of hills running north-west from Resaca, Georgia. May 14th, we got on the line at 9 a. m.; Company C, was deployed as skirmishers until 2 p. m.; heavy skirmishing all along the line until 1 p. m. when the battle of Resaca opened in earnest and continued with terrific energy until dark. We lost 6 killed and 36 wounded, our brigade was in the charge, on the hottest part of the line, on the rebel works. May 15th, our brigade relieved from the front, moved 2 miles to the right and a little to the rear. Our line entrenched last night and to-day; at about 11 p. m. the rebels assaulted our lines, but were handsomely repulsed; this was done to cover their retreat, which began at 10 p. m. May 16th, our army was immediately put in pursuit of the retreating rebels, some arms, forage, ammunition, artillery and rebels, were captured. The rebels destroyed the railway bridge at Resaca. Our Division moved about noon, and camped near Resaca, Georgia. May 17th, we passed through Calhoun, Georgia, and the Fourth corps train passed us near there. We camped 5 miles south of town. May 18th, our march was through a beautiful valley; passed through Adairsville, Georgia, and camped 5 miles beyond. May 19th, started at 10 a. m. marched on railroad track to Kingston, Georgia, 5 miles, where we halted, formed a line of battle, and at night, breastworks of logs and rails were speedily constructed, fearing an attack, as it was thought that the rebels would give us a battle here; but they left before daylight, on the 20th, crossing the Etowah river. Cars run into Kingston and through our camp to-day. May 22nd, sick and disabled men and surplus baggage, sent to the rear, rations issued, preparations making with all possible dispatch for the great campaign to begin to-morrow. The army is stripped for battle. May 23rd, the army began moving early this a. m. we started at 10 a. m.; west south west 5 miles to a ford of the Etowah river; the boys stripped off and forded the river this p. m. After crossing, we marched in a south easterly course 6 or 7 miles and formed line of battle, about 8 p. m., then rested for the night. May 24th, our division were train guards for the army. About 10 a. m. the trains and troops started, but the whole division was not in motion before the trains were parked, and we camped in a woods about one half mile north-west of last night's camp. Lots of private foraging done. A heavy thunderstorm at 8 p. m. May 25th, heavy artillery firing in front this evening, toward the south-east which proved quite a fight. May 26th, started at 5 a. m. on the Burnt Hickory Road, went 6 miles into the Allatoona Mountain range, when our brigade was sent back to Kingston Georgia, to guard a supply train to the front. We started back at 2 p. m. marched to Free Bridge on the Etowah river, crossed and camped on the right bank. May 27th, the Thirty-First O. V. I. and our regiment went to Kingston Georgia, 4 miles, met the train about 10 a. m. and turned toward the front again, crossed Euharlee river, near Euharlee Mills, and passed near Stilesborough, Georgia; camped at foot of Allatoona hills, about 2 miles from yesterday's turning point. May 28th, heavy artillery firing in front this a. m. We camped in a woods full of lizards, snakes, wood ticks, and whortleberries. May 29th, at 10 a. m. we were ordered with the train, to our left and rear, went back to Burnt Hickory, thence 2 miles eastward, near Pumpkin Vine Creek, and camped in a very thick woods. June 2nd, started at 1 p. m. north-east toward Cambridge, Georgia. Very heavy thunder shower at 2 p. m.; camped on left bank of Pumpkin Vine Creek, as it was too high to cross. Troops are continually moving to our left, skirmishing and artillery firing in front, almost continually. June 3rd, after noon we moved in direction of

Marietta, Georgia, crossing two creeks. Very warm, heavy thunderstorm about dark; camped in the woods, amid the trains we were guarding; Company B. on picket. June 5th, started at 4:30 a. m., went to Burnt Church and was shifted from place to place. June 7th, started at 6 a. m., passed through Acworth, Georgia, and camped one and half miles south, in the woods. Immense wagon train parked near us. June 8th, received the first mail we have had for several days. June 10th, the whole army moving toward Marietta, Georgia. We went to the front, came upon rebel pickets, about 4 miles from Acworth, formed line of battle, threw skirmishers forward, who engaged the rebel skirmishers; no casualties reported. Cars came to Big Shanty, Georgia, which is 2 miles to our rear. June 11th, about 2 p. m. we moved; after much halting, marching and counter-marching, we took position in front line, in center of the army, about 11 p. m. June 13th, the rebel cars and ours ran within 2 miles of each other, on same track. June 14th, moved south about one half mile, at noon, and took position in 2nd line. Rebel General Polk killed. Sharp skirmishing for several days past. June 15th, heavy skirmishing all along the line. We moved to the left, and were in second line, both armies moving to our left. June 17th, we moved to front line, Companies D. and H. skirmished all night. We built breastworks, and rebels attack us but were repulsed. June 18th, Companies C. and F. charged rebel pickets capturing 4 and driving the rest into their breastworks, fighting nearly 2 hours without support, when our brigade came up and fought till dark. Company C. had 1 killed and 2 wounded. June 19th, daylight revealed the fact that the rebels had retreated. We pursued them, days spent in skirmishing; very heavy artillery firing from our batteries. Night found us in front of Kenesaw Mountain fronting east, skirmishing with the rebels, and fortifying with dispatch. We advanced to within about 700 yards of the rebel's works, and kept their artillery silent with musketry. Threw up a temporary fort at night for our artillery. June 20th, our skirmish line, is within 15 or 20 yards of the rebels. We have three lines of works. Heavy skirmishing all along the line. Our artillery gave the rebels a terrific shelling this evening. June 21st, the rebels got their artillery in position on the mountain and began shelling our camps, immediately our batteries opened and there was one of the grandest artillery duels of the war. Heavy skirmishing in our front just before night; our men held their ground. June 22nd, the rebels gave us a severe shelling this afternoon, from five different points. Our artillery replied promptly and with effect. Shortly after dark we moved to the right and into front line, already fortified, in an open field, in the hottest hole we have yet found, as regards both the sun and fire from the rebels. June 23rd, the rebel sharpshooters annoyed us exceedingly, shooting at every one who stuck his head above our breastworks. Incessant and severe skirmishing all day, and another of the most fierce artillery duels. Company H. skirmishers, and Companies C., D., F. and I are to be skirmishers, for the next 24 hours, beginning at 9 p. m. Considerable rain and hot weather of late. June 24th, 4 of our regiment wounded by the rebel sharpshooters, 3 of them to-day. After Companies C. and I. were relieved from skirmish line at 9 p. m. they were ordered to cut trenches in rear of our breastworks, to enable the men to go for water, without being picked off by rebel sharpshooters. They worked until 1 o'clock, and resumed work early June 25th, suspending work as soon as the fog cleared away, until night. Another artillery duel this p. m. by 3 batteries on each side. Our men blew one of the rebel caissons up. June 26th, at 10 p. m. our division was relieved by a division of the Fifteenth Army Corps. We moved to the right, halting at 2 a. m. in the rear of Fourth corps, right; and the Twentieth corps, left. June 27th, at 8 a. m. we supported a part of the Second division of our corps, and a part of the Fifteenth and Twentieth Army Corps on a charge on the rebel's works, but our forces were repulsed. John Call, Company D. was badly wounded. June 29th, weather very hot lately. A little to our left and front a truce was agreed for to-day, and officers and soldiers of both armies conversed and bartered freely with each other. In the night, a considerable fight kicked up, on the part of the line where the truce was. June 30th, our division was ordered to relieve General Geary in front, this was quietly done before 10 p. m. We are in the 2nd line. Pickets got into a fight before mid-night; we are near a good spring. July 2nd, some artillery firing this a. m., in the evening heavy cannonading to our left for about 2 hours. Our batteries kept up a desultory fire all night along the line; some of our forces moved to our right. Rebels left their strong position at night, retreating towards Atlanta. July 3rd, we started at 9 a. m. in pursuit, perfectly enveloped by ordnance and supply trains, we bivouacked about 5 miles south of Marietta, Georgia. July 4th, considerable skirmishing and cannonading. The rebels are entrenched on Chattahoochee river. At 12 m. our brigade ordered forward, we formed in 2 lines in an open field, here we waited for orders, which did not come. Blackberries, dewberries and green grapes found in considerable quantities and eaten. Skirmishing all night. The rebels fell back in the night, to the river bank, formed on both sides of it and fortified. July 5th, Our forces started early in pursuit, skirmishing soon began and continued all day. Our artillery shelled them some, and some prisoners were captured. We camped on the rail road and can see Atlanta, Georgia, from the hills near us. July 6th, skirmishing all day, on different parts of the line and very heavy artillery firing after dark. July 8th, 130 pickets from our regiment, 24 from Company C., Companies A, D. and F. on skirmish line; heavy skirmishing. July 9th, Major General Schofield crossed the Chattahoochee river last night, to our left. About 8:30 a. m. our artillery opened on the rebels in our front and our skirmishers advanced, but were repulsed with loss, our regiment lost 4 men killed and wounded. Company C. on skirmish line at night. The rebels fell back to south side of Chattahoochee river during the night, burning the rail road and Pontoon bridges after them. July 10th, our forces moved to the left. We moved about noon, and occupied ground vacated by the Fourth corps, near the river. Companies B, C. and K. are on picket. A truce was agreed on between our own and the rebel pickets, occupying opposite sides of the river, and large numbers of both armies bathed in the river, which is about 150 yards wide, rapid, shallow and has a rocky bed, with tolerably deep channel. July 13th, our forces crossed the river, a few miles above us, on our left. July 15th, Doctor J. E. Fowler returned to regiment. July 16th, Lieutenant Hurd started back to Bridgeport, Alabama, for necessary baggage. July 17th, our troops appeared on the opposite side of the river this forenoon. A pontoon bridge was put down from our side, and before night the Fourteenth and Twentieth corps crossed, the balance of our army crossed several days ago higher up. Considerable skirmishing this afternoon. July 18th, we moved forward, crossed Nancy's Creek in the afternoon, and are now on the right of our army. July 19th, started shortly after sunrise towards Atlanta, Georgia. Knapsacks left behind and a fight expected. A short time before dark, we waded Peach Tree Creek, width 12 yards, depth 2 feet. We then fortified ourselves forthwith. July 20th, we advanced carefully this morning to a ridge of the hills a short distance in front and threw up works. Steady skirmishing all day, in our front. The rebels made a vigorous assault, to our left, on General Hooker and Howard at 5 p. m. and met with a bloody repulse. The battle lasted over an hour, and was very severe, part of the First and Second Divisions of the Fourteenth corps, with the Fourth and Twentieth corps, were engaged. The rebels retired about a mile behind strong fortifications. Our adjutant Ruffner was wounded in the head, and one of Company K. was wounded. July 21st, our main line was advanced this afternoon, bringing on sharp skirmishing; we fortified again. Companies C., E., F. and I. on picket. About 11 p. m. the rebel pickets ceased firing and their army retreated to their final defences of Atlanta, Georgia. July 22nd, at 7 a. m. we moved forward to within two miles of Atlanta, formed line of battle and fortified. Heavy skirmishing along the whole line. The rebels furiously assailed the left of our army inflicting and meeting with heavy loss. Major General McPherson commanding left wing of our army, was killed. Our corps on the extreme right, Captain Inskeep, Company C., had charge of our brigade skirmishers; he moved to the front at 7 a. m. to the railroad, meeting no opposition, thence on R. R. one mile toward Atlanta, their joined the brigade, then again deployed his skirmishers, moved forward to the top of a hill a half mile in front of our battle line, and to the right of Atlanta, driving the rebel cavalry off the hill, remaining there until relieved at 6 p. m. by Company B. and others. About dusk the rebels made a demonstration against our part of the line, without effect. July 23rd, rebels formed in 3 lines, in our front, in plain sight, threw their skirmishers forward, as though they intended to charge us, but did not. Artillery firing all day by both armies. A number of round shots came ricocheting through our camp. July 25th, at night it was reported that the rebels were massing on our right and intended to attack us, so there was considerable stir among our men; a detail from our brigade was made to extend our fortifications, they worked nearly all night. July 26th, we moved into the new works, in the front line, and camped in the midst of a graveyard. July 27th, the army of the Tennessee (the Fifteenth, Sixteenth and Seventeenth corps.) commanded by Major General Howard, all moved from the extreme left of our army, to the extreme right, the rebels made a corresponding movement, which it is thought, will bring on an engagement. July 28th, the army of the Tennessee advanced this forenoon until it met the enemy. This p. m. Hood's old corps, of the rebel army, attacked the army of the Tennessee, and got badly used up, being repulsed, with 400 killed. When the battle commenced, we moved to our right and occupied works vacated by the Second Division of our corps, which went out to support our extreme right flank. July 29th, troops moving to our right. August 1st, the rebels shelled our camps, with heavy artillery, this p. m. but little damage done. Our regiment furnished pickets for our brigade yesterday and 100 men to-day, Company C. and others went on at dark; brisk skirmishing all night. August 2nd, the Twenty-third corps moved from the extreme left, to extreme right, of our army. August 3rd, our corps moved to the right of the Twenty-third corps. Our brigade did not get into position until after dark, then we had to throw up works at night. Our line ran N. N. W. at such an angle, with the main line, that the rebels, threw shells into our rear and we had some trouble to find our place on it, in the darkness. August 5th, our division swung forward its right this forenoon, meeting with considerable resistance. We were support for the skirmishers and were on the right; our skirmish line charged the rebel skirmish line and captured it entire. The skirmishers got very near the rebels works. The supporting line halted in the woods where underbrush was thick, and commenced fortifying. The rebels soon began shelling us, with serious effect, but we went on with our work. Lieutenant Barnes killed; William H. Rhoden, Company C., and several others of the regiment, wounded. The Twenty-third corps on our right, its right refused. August 6th, the rebels shelled us all day, their batteries estimated to be five hundred yards distant. Pickets kept up a constant firing. The Twenty-third corps undertook to swing on a line with us, but only partially succeeded, losing heavily in killed and wounded. Rained very hard just before night. August 7th, all forenoon skirmishing continued, in the afternoon a general advance of our skirmish line, and heavy artillery firing along our line, to create a diversion in favor of the Twenty-third corps, to enable it to swing on a line with us; considerable hard fighting was the result, but some of the rebels works were taken, and the plan succeeded. The rebels shelled us severely, wounding three of our regiment. Two lines of works were built in advance of ours, at night, close to the rebels main line. Artillery was planted on our picket line at night. August 8th, the armies are so near each other that they fire out of their main works effectively with muskets. At 5. p.m. we marched to the extreme left of our division and relieved the Thirty-first O.V.V. I. from a very bad place on the front line, where they had lost twenty-six men in killed and wounded, in twenty-four hours. August 9th, a truce was agreed on between the pickets in our front, hence quiet reigns there. Our Adjutant J. M. Ruffner was killed at 6 p. m. by a rebel sharpshooter. We were soon thereafter, relieved by the Thirty-first O. V. V. I. very glad to get out of the muddy trenches. August 10th, Adjutant Ruffner's remains started for Ohio. About noon a rebel shell killed one and severely wounded another, of our regiment. A. C. Inskeep, Company C., was also hit by a piece of shell. The Eighty-second Indiana was in the "Belly of Hell", where Ruffner was killed, and to-night we relieved them. Heavy artillery firing on some parts of the line to-day. August 11th, at 6 a. m. relieved by Thirty-first O. V. V. I. The truce still continues, in our front; the lines here are very close, as a man can hit another's eye three shots out of five, from our skirmish line, to the rebels, and these lines are only a few yards in front, of the main works on either side. Company C. on skirmish line at night. At 11 p. m. we moved to the right and occupied works vacated by the Second Division, Fourteenth corps, who had been keeping up a continual fire all the time, but we forthwith effected a truce with the rebels. August 12th, we are in an open field, in which the rebels have two lines of works in plain sight and very close. Artillery firing continually. August 13th, truce continues. "Yanks" and "Johnnies" hold friendly intercourse in our front, but on our right and left, no truce exists. Rebels are deserting very fast, several came in at night and reported the rebel army badly discouraged. August 14th, truce continues in our immediate front. Rebel pickets are friendly, meeting our boys half way between the lines, unarmed, for a chat and to trade. August 15th, our boys and the rebels have frequent meetings between the lines and our boys often persuade the rebels to desert, the plan is this, our boys take out a Federal uniform, the rebel slips it on, then comes unmolested into our lines, five came in that way to-day and many more promise to come to night, they all belong to the First Georgia Regiment Infantry. August 19th, at 2 a. m. we marched to the right one half mile to support a movement of the Twenty-third corps; at noon the rebels shelled our empty tents left in camp, furiously. In the afternoon our batteries, on the left of our empty camp, gave the rebels a terrific shelling. We returned to camp after dark. August 20th, we repeated the movement made yesterday, going three miles further; the Twenty-third corps reached, and tore up, the Macon Ry. in rear of rebel army. We left camp shortly before day light, without knapsacks and returned before dark. A detail of three from each company sent out to get corn, they got corn, chickens, etc. August 21st, a furious artillery duel this forenoon, on our part of the line. The rebels showered the shells about us, but did little damage. August 25th, the Twentieth corps moved back to the Chattahoochee river and occupied a fortified position. August 26th, the army of the Tennessee moved to our right with their trains. At sundown our part of the line, was ordered to pack up and be ready to march at once. About 9 p. m. the rebels commenced shelling us vigorously and continued at intervals until, we withdrew from our line, near 3 a. m. August 27th, we retired slowly towards the right of our army, to protect the trains in advance of us. The rebels followed promptly. A considerable rebel force moved towards the Chattahoochee river, attacked the Twentieth corps but were repulsed. August 28th, our army has steadily moved to the right. Our corps crossed the Montgomery Ry. and commenced fortifying. The rebel cavalry are quite numerous, but give us little trouble. We bivouacked one half mile south of Ry.; Companies C, E. and F. on picket. August 30th, movements commenced early, our forces moved south easterly, approaching the Macon Ry. The Fourth corps on the left, army of the Tennessee on the right of our corps. In the afternoon, the Fourth and Fourteenth corps took position along the La Fayette road, the right of our Division at Conchis' house. The rebel cavalry have been hovering along our lines all day, considerable skirmishing with them. We fortified our position at night. The rebels wagon train moving southward to-night. Companies A, F. and K. skirmishers to-day and Company B. on skirmish line to night. We are within $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles of Rough and Ready, Georgia.

August 31st, our brigade moved eastward, towards the Jonesborough and Atlanta road, and shelled the rebel wagon train passing south, thereon, they soon abandoned the road. Company C, on skirmish line. Boys obtained all the fresh pork, roasting ears and wild grapes they wanted. At 3 p. m. Brigade inspector Capt. Grosvenor, Capts. Noles Company I, and Inskeep Company C., Lieutenants Ward, Champlin, James, Eversole and Bird, with 100 men from our regiment, made a reconnoissance to the front, and took possession of the Macon Ry. at Morrows station, sixteen miles south of Atlanta, Georgia. When they first came in sight of the road, the rear of Hardee's rebel corps was passing on its way to Jonesborough, Georgia. Our boys moved forward immediately onto the road and captured several stragglers. They had considerable skirmishing with rebel cavalry from the time they started until night, when their supports were withdrawn, our boys withdrew and on their way to camp, met five regiments going to their support, our boys then faced about retook the railroad and fortified the position. Captain Inskeep came near getting captured and escaped only by slipping out to the roadside and letting the rebels pass. The balance of our regiment supported the Ninety-second O.V.I. skirmishers, while advancing towards Rough and Ready, Georgia. September 1st, this p. m. our forces moved on the rebels at Jonesborough, Georgia, defeated and routed them, our corps did most of the work. Our brigade supported the First and Second Divisions of our corps, and our Third Division, took 700 prisoners and 10 guns; the loss in our Division 350 killed and wounded. Army of the Tennessee on the right, entrenched, Fourth corps on the left of our corps. The rebels were entrenched and fought bravely. At night they retreated south easterly, precipitately, leaving their dead and wounded, a large amount of artillery and small arms, in our hands. Heavy thunder shower at night. Atlanta evacuated by rebels, in the night, after they destroyed large quantities of stores, eighty cars loaded with ammunition, ect., machine shops, etc., etc. September 2nd, pursuit commenced this morning, by the Fourth, Fifteenth, Sixteenth and Seventeenth corps, our corps left at Jonesborough to protect the rear, gather up the spoils, bury the dead, take care of the wounded and tear up the railroad, all of which was done speedily and in good order. At 11 a. m. the Twentieth corps occupied Atlanta. The Twenty-third corps is the extreme left of our army. river. A printing office burned, by order. March 13th, a big fire in Fayetteville at night. A row occurred and one of the Twentieth corps was killed by a guard. March 14th, arsenal destroyed, cotton factories and foundries burned, by order of General Baird. March 16th, started at 2 a. m. crossed the Cape Fear river, marched one mile, lay down until 3 a. m. when we resumed the march on the Raleigh plank road. Our division guarded train all day, through the rain. March 17th, we made corduroy road, from our camp last night, to Black River Bridge where we camped. March 19th, crossed Black River. Heard heavy firing to the front, camped near Bentonville, North Carolina at sunset. March 20th, at noon we came up to the advance of the Twentieth and our corps. In the evening our division was sent to the front, to try to draw the rebels out of their fortifications, but failed to do so. After one half hours skirmishing, we returned to our main line. Major Clark was wounded in left hip by musket ball, and about ten in our brigade were wounded. March 21st, the army of the Tennessee had quite a fight, to our right. Rebels retreated during the night, towards Raleigh North Carolina. March 22nd, started for Goldsborough, North Carolina. Again with the trains. Roads dusty, the sand flew in perfect showers all day, got to camp at 11 p. m. March 23rd, we were reviewed by Generals Sherman and Schofield as we passed through Goldsborough, and camped near town. March 25th, Lieutenant Weakley, Company F, with his foragers, came in with at least six days rations for our regiment, it being the last day, for mounted foragers. March 26th, we received the first mail since February 8th. April 4th, General Schofield reviewed, our division. April 6th, we first heard of the fall of Richmond and Petersburg, Virginia; there was much rejoicing among us, the boys loaded logs and stumps and fired them off at night. April 9th, George H. Godden, Finley Kelsey and James Clifton, Company B, came to us, from hospital at Nashville, Tennessee. April 10th, marched toward Raleigh, North Carolina, some skirmishing all day, rebels hard to drive. April 11th, we arrived at Smithfield, North Carolina, at 1 p. m. and camped. Rebels retired across Neuse river and were easily driven to-day. April 12th, brisk skirmishing. The surrender of Lee and his army, first heard of by us. Rebels made but one stand to-day, and we soon routed them. Just after dark Governor Graham, with his staff, came to Clayton, North Carolina, (where we camped,) on a train of cars, and surrendered Raleigh to General Sherman, then they remained all night. April 13th, arrived at Raleigh, North Carolina at 1 p. m. and camped near the Lunatic Asylum. April 14th, marched towards Holly Springs, North Carolina. Guarding trains again, and roads very muddy. April 16th, started at 6 a. m. camped at Collin's Cross Roads, North Carolina. The surrender of Johnson confirmed. April 18th, the first news received by us of Lincoln's assassination, which occurred on the night of April 14th. April 20th, order promulgated, from General Sherman about negotiations with Johnson for the surrender of the Rebel army. April 21st, we moved camp one mile into a forest. Citizens came in camp to get horses and mules to assist in making crops; women and children came seeking provisions, all were supplied. April 27th, we had unofficial intelligence of the surrender of Johnson's army to General Sherman. April 28th, at 2 a. m. heavy firing of musketry was heard in the direction of the First division. Fourteenth corps camp, five miles from our camp, about 3 a. m. Artillery firing began, both kinds of firing increased rapidly. Our boys got very uneasy, all got up without orders, thinking the First Division had been attacked by the enemy. General Baird ordered our Division out at 4 a. m. and sent our brigade at 5 a. m. to the aid of the First Division. The firing continued as we approached, but no wounded men seen coming from the fight, made us think the rebels were between us and the First Division. Finally we were in sight of the First Division camp, but found no enemy. The boys were only jollifying over the surrender of Johnson, which they had heard of before we did. (We received the official notice during the day.) After returning to our own camp at 8 a. m., we started on our homeward march via Raleigh. The Railroad Accident near Pataskala Ohio.

July 21st, 1865, after being discharged, about one half of the regiment left Columbus, Ohio, at 4:20 o'clock a. m. on the B. & O. Railway, via Zanesville, Ohio, for their homes. About daylight, between Summit Station and Pataskala, in Licking county, while the train was going at the rate of about thirty-five or forty miles an hour, something about the engine broke, which derailed the whole train, except the ladies' coach. In an instant, Quarter Master Sergeant George F. Kutz, Privates Matthias Harris, Company I, Martin T. Keller, John Rader, and Amos J. Smith, Company K, were killed, and the following were injured: Corporal James Gannon, Company A, ankle hurt; Private William Gannon, Co. A, Musician, James McGowen, Co. F, ankle hurt, Privates of Company I, William England, foot mashed, Oliver P. Martin, leg and shoulder mashed, James Hawkins, thumb dislocated, and Ellison Murdock, both feet mashed; Privates, Company K, Henry Canode, feet mashed, John W. Jones, right arm mashed and amputated later, Joel J. Hansberger, two ribs broken, and Abraham Rader, legs and feet mashed. There were several civilians killed and injured also. Some of those killed were in sight of their homes, and were standing on the platform of the cars, looking for the last time, on the homes they had not seen for several years, and so soon expected to enter. A negro passenger had a leg cut off, below the knee, and although suffering much pain, he requested some one to find his boot with the balance of his leg in it, as he had quite a sum of money in bills, wrapped around that ankle. Some of our boys had their pockets picked, during the excitement, by professional pickpockets, who had left Columbus, on the same train, for that purpose. A lady passenger tore her under clothing into bandages, for those injured, and the boys at once made up a purse, and presented her with a handsome sum of money. John Guseman, Company A, says that the lady lived at No. 69 Mullberry street, Baltimore, Maryland, and that the boys gave her $369; but the lady's name has been forgotten, and all efforts to obtain same have failed.

Joel J. Hansberger, Company K, Tells About the Killed in the above Accident, as Follows:

I saw a man hanling hay, about one-fourth of a mile away; an old rebel you might know, for he never came near to help. I went and asked him if he would haul the dead to Baltimore, Ohio. "No" was his answer "I can't go, I must get my hay in, or it will spoil." I said "well those dead men will spoil too". He replied that he could not help it. I then called John J. Kumber, Company K, and when he came, told him that here was a full blooded rebel, and that we would show him a "Yankee" trick. Kumler said "All right." I jumped on the wagon, took the reins, and told Kumler to throw some hay on, which he did. We then started for the Railroad. The old man wanted to know what I was going to do, I told him I was going to take those dead men to Baltimore. He said "not with this team," but I said "yes with this team." He tried to stop me, but I pulled out a little revolver, and told him to stand back, which he did. After loading the three dead members of Company K, and George Kutz's dead body, Amos Smith, Kumler and I started for Baltimore, Ohio, with the owner of the team also on the wagon. He never spoke a word, and when we arrived at Baltimore, I asked him his bill. He said he did not know how much to charge, so I gave him four dollars and told him to go, now, and haul his hay.

Biographical Sketch of Lieutenant Jacob M. Ruffner, Adjutant of the 17th Regiment O. V. V. I.

He was born in Richland Township, Fairfield county, Ohio, June 19th, 1840; attended district school in his early life, in the Winter months, working on his father's farm in Summer months. Prior to the Rebellion he attended the West Rushville Academy, and was in attendance at the first term of the Fairfield Union Academy at Pleasantville, Ohio, when Fort Sumter was fired upon. He was somewhat deficient in education, but was a diligent student and no doubt would have stood at the head of his class, had not "Stern, grim visaged war" darkened the horizon. When the tocsin of the war sounded at Sumter, young Ruffner was among the first to respond to his country's call. He enlisted in Captain James W. Stinchcomb's Company F, 17th Regiment, O. V. I. for the period of three months and participated in all the wearisome marches made by the regiment in West Virginia. At Ravenswood, West Virginia he served in the capacity of a scout, donning citizen's clothes and with his life in his hands, went beyond the lines, into the enemy's country. He returned in safety, having obtained the information so much sought by his commanding officer. At the expiration of his term of service he re-enlisted in Company B, 17th Regiment, O. V. I. for three years and was appointed First Sergeant. Thoroughness and zeal were characterized in all his duties, and he was promoted to First Lieutenant and appointed Adjutant of the regiment. He took part in the battles of Wild Cat, Mill Springs, Stone River, Hoover's Gap, the Siege of Corinth and the innumerable battles fought between Ringgold, Georgia, and Atlanta. In the lurid, seething hell of Chickamauga, when the colors of the 87th Indiana had fallen to the ground, young Ruffner saved the flag and fired every round of his revolver into the rebels' faces at the distance of only a few paces. He was as tender hearted as he was brave. When ordered by his captain to inform the wounded in the hospital, that our troops would be compelled to leave them to the tender mercies of the rebels, he replied "If you order me to take the company and charge that battery, I will do it, but I cannot tell those brave boys we must leave them." His early religious training made him a fatalist, and he often said that if he was to be killed he would be no safer one hundred feet under the ground than in the thickest of the battle. At the battle of Kenesaw Mt. he took a haversack full of cartridges, leaped over the parapet, and issued them to the men in the rifle pits, when it was almost certain death to show a head above the works. This he did as nonchalantly as if on dress parade and no enemy near. He was killed in front of Atlanta, Georgia, at about 6 p. m. August 9th, 1864, aged 24 years, 1 month and 20 days, and when the spires of the doomed city were in sight. He had command of the skirmishers, and when about to be relieved by another officer, rose upon the small earthworks in his front to point out the rebel line to the officer who was about to relieve him, and while in the act, was struck in the head by a rebel bullet, fell and died in the arms of General Durban Ward, who loved him as a brother. As his body was borne to the rear, brave men shed silent tears and resolved anew in their hearts, that the glorious banner for which young Ruffner had laid down his life, should in the end, wave victorious over our land and sea. His body was embalmed and sent home to his sorrowing friends, and upon the day of the funeral, after an oration by his former Colonel, J. M. Connell, he was buried by the Masonic Order in Stevenson Cemetery, on the banks of the Rush Creek, in Richland Township, Fairfield County, Ohio. Brave, stainless, truehearted Jacob M. Ruffner! Such a life was worth more to humanity, to civilization and to country, than the lives of a thousand traitors. May we meet thee in the Grand Camping Ground above. He went up to God from under the shadow of the flag, but the country he loved, purged in the fiery crucible of war, still lives.

"The shriek of the bondman, the clank of the chain
Are hushed, as a tale that is told;
And the clouds that once hung like a pall o'er the plain,
Have swept by, and the skies are as gold.
The birds build their nest in the cannon's cold lips,
The camps have extinguished their fires;
And the babe of Ethiopia plays with the whips
That were soaked in the blood of their sires."

He was nick named "Kate" Ruffner from being at one time, in the three month service, a cook for his mess, and by this name was principally known in the army; in fact it was always Lieutenant Kate Ruffner, or Kate Ruffner.

The Old Union Wagon.

NOTE.—This song is supposed to have been composed by Newton W. Pearce
Principal Musician of the Regiment.

AIR "WAIT FOR THE WAGON."

In Uncle Sam's Dominion in Eighteen Sixty-One,
The fight between Secession, and the Union was begun.
The South, declared they'd have the rights, which Uncle Sam denied;
Or in the Secesh wagon they'd all take a ride.

CHORUS.—Hurrah for the wagon, the old Union wagon;
We'll stick to our wagon, and all take a ride.

The Makers of our wagon, were men of solid wit,
They made it out of "Charter Oak," that wouldn't rot or split.
Its wheels are of material, the strongest and the best;
And two are named the North and South, and two the East and West.

Our wagon bed is strong enough for any "revolution,"
In fact it is the "hull" of the old Constitution.
Her couplings strong, her axles long, and any where you get her,
No Monarch's frown can back her down, no-Traitor can upset her.

This good old Union wagon, the nations all admired;
Her wheels had run for four score years, and never once been tired.
Her passengers were happy; along her way she whirled;
For the good old Union wagon, was the glory of the world.

But when old Abram took command, the South wheel was displeased
Because the public "fat" was gone, that kept her axles greased;
And when he gathered up the reins, and started on his route,
She plunged into secession and knocked some "fellers" out.

Now while in this secession mire the wheel was sticking tightly,
Some Tory passengers got mad and cursed the driver slightly;
But Abram "couldn't see it," so he didn't heed their clatter,
There's too much "black mud on the wheels," says he, "that's what's the matter."

So Abram gave them notice, that in Eighteen Sixty-Three,
Unless the rebels "dried it up" he'd set the "niggers" free;
And then the man, that led the van to fight against his nation,
Would drop his gun, and home he'd run, to fight against starvation.

When Abram said he'd free the slaves that furnished those supplies,
It opened Northern traitors mouths, and Southern traitors eyes;
The slaves said they, will run away, if you thus rashly free them;
But Abram "supposed," perhaps they'd best go home and oversee them.

Around our Union wagon, with shoulders to the wheel,
A million soldiers rally, with hearts as true as steel;
And of all the Generals, high or low, that helped to save the Nation.
There's none that struck a harder blow, than General Emancipation.

ADDRESS OF

Colonel JOHN M. CONNELL,

AT THE REUNION OF THE 17TH OHIO VOLUNTEER INFANTRY, AT LANCASTER, OHIO, AUGUST 17TH, 1881.

The people of the Northwest were quick to understand the revolt of the South and prompt to act with armed strength in defense of the Union. To them it was not an insurrection of the Southern people against the temporary rulers of the Nation and their enforcement of its laws. The proclamation of the President, calling out a few thousand militia to put down such an insurrection, to them seemed like reading the Riot Act and calling for Sheriff's posse to disperse Davis' army.

Ohio, by her location and her great strength, was central, pivotal and dominant, from the beginning of the war in all its events. Her people, before hostilities began, understood the purposes of the Southern leaders, and their strength, preparations and determination. That by severing the States and levying war upon the United States, they intended to put an end to nationality, and bring on the people "the intestine shock and furious close of civil butchery."

They gathered into full ranked battalions, ready for the inevitable war in defense of imperiled National existence.

In the politics of the young States of the Northwest there had grown with their growth one paramount, all pervading sentiment: Love for the Union. It controlled every political thought and movement of their people. The name "disunionist" was a synonym of traitor. The old States vaunted their authorship of the Union, and even asserted that as they were its creators they might be its destroyers. To the people of the States of the Northwest, earliest born of the Union, it was as a parent to be adored, cherished and protected, while one ruddy drop visited a true heart. Bewildered politicians at Washington, though patriotic, like Buchanan sought in theoretic mazes some escape from this living fact of civil war. The latter, finding in the debates on the adoption of the Federal Constitution a justification for his declaration in his annual message that "the power to make war against a State is at variance with the whole spirit and intent of the Constitution," ignoring the awful fact that States were making war against the government of the people, and hesitating to tell the truth that war existed then by the belligerent acts of rebellious States. And the brave but gentle hearted Lincoln for a time, took counsel of the fears of politicians, and failed to respond to the indignation of the people surging in tides against the Nation's destroyers, and could only feel his way to the faint call for 75,000 of the militia "to suppress a combination of States to obstruct the execution of the laws of the United States, and to cause the laws to be duly executed." But to the people this faint tinkling of the alarm bell swelled into a thundering tocsin of war already begun; into which they threw themselves, knowing and not fearing its terrors.

We had heard the sound of Sumter's guns, and were ready for this feeble call, and we are here to-day because we answered the challenge to war, by enrolling ourselves as soldiers of the Union, to fight its enemies.

The history of our own very good, very useful and very fortunate regiment, generally, is like that of each of the northwestern volunteer battalions, whose zeal, devotion, valor, patience, rugged strength, intelligence and endurance made disunion by force impossible, and proved the power of the people to crush assailants of their government inside or out of its threshold. The Seventeenth was quickly formed. April 15th, 1861, the President's call for 75,000 was issued. Between that date and the 23rd, of April, eight days, ten companies were assembled at Camp Anderson, Lancaster, Ohio, to form the 17th Regiment, O. V. I., and May 13th, in that camp, it was fully organized and ready for the field; but oh, vain purpose, for only three months service, to learn a little in the school of the soldier, and act as special police somewhere during the Summer months. Nevertheless, its service had value. Not only as a nucleus and a training school but by its presence in the new State of West Virginia, then so important in the new State's experimental existence. Pleasant was the day of the regiment's reception and welcome at Benwood by the members of its first legislature.

And when cut up by details, or serving in the detachments at Buchanan, Ravenswood, or in reconnoissance, or united again in the front, there were no idle days, and there was satisfaction in the fact that we had aided in hurting the pride of the old Dominion, by protecting her faithful people while they made for themselves a new loyal State, carved out of the territory of belligerent, revolted Virginia. Here the regiment was in the provisional brigade of General Rosencrans, in Gen. McClellan's command, and here began the attachment for Rosencrans which grew stronger in after years when the regiment reorganized, served under him in the exciting times of tremendous import, when he commanded the Army of the Cumberland.

Our short service ended in anxiety to know the future of a regiment proud of its brief record, and desirous of a resurrection to a longer life. On the 15th of August, 1861, it was mustered out at Zanesville, Ohio. On the next day I received my new commission as Colonel of the Seventeenth, with orders to reorganize the regiment at Camp Goddard, Zanesville. The officers were no longer elected, and I was empowered to appoint my own recruiting officers, who would earn their final commissions by success in recruiting. This cut off red tape and delay. The responsibility of quick and successful reorganization and reofficering of the regiment, I felt, rested entirely on me, as no other field or staff officer had, as yet, been named. Twenty years ago to-day I began the work at Camp Goddard, in the midst of war enthusiasm.

The people of Ohio were an unit. War was a fact. No more calling out of militia to suppress riots. No more peace arguments of politicians based upon theories of mutual concessions. Broken were the "mystic chords of memory, stretching from every battle-field and patriotic grave to every living heart and hearth-stone, and yet to swell the music of the Union," which the better angel of Lincoln's nature would touch in his inaugural address. The men who had broken our Union, were armed to kill its defenders and make sure their fatal work.

And all Ohio's sons were gathering into the camps with sure strength and unflinching determination to strike down the last armed foe of the Nation. The Seventeenth filled up rapidly; was but a few days at camp Goddard, and then ordered to Camp Dennison. By the middle of September more men had reported for the regiment than filled its quota, and opportunity for selection occurred. The regiment at that date was ready for duty. On the 25th of September I reported in person to Gen. Mitchell, commanding Department of Ohio, at Cincinnati. I was ordered verbally to be ready to move on the 29th, and in this interview I was given officially confidential information as to our movements and the situation. I was to report with my regiment at Camp Dick Robinson to Gen. Thomas, who was organizing a force to defend against the approach of Zollicoffer's army, estimated at 15,000, and ready to move North, occupying Central Kentucky with camps of rendezvous for Kentucky rebels, so that the State might be in revolt as a fact if not by legislative act. Buckner's command then being in Western Kentucky. But the ultimate purpose and cherished scheme of Mitchell was to move, as soon as he had sufficient force, through Cumberland Gap, and at Knoxville establish an entrenched camp for recruiting the patriotic and loyal East Tennesseans and North Carolinians.

And then what? Ah! Who knew? All was tentative, large detachments moved hither and thither with temporary objects, good sized armies were employed as outposts, as reconnoitering columns, or in camps of observation and instruction waiting for something to turn up. But for the present, there seemed work enough for the 17th. True, it did look as if we might have to repeat our West Virginia campaign in East Tennessee—stand guard while East Tennessee should be organized into a State, in one event: But in the other, the advance of Zollicoffer with his greatly superior numbers if made at once, would truly make us a large part of a forlorn hope to meet him, and there was romance in those words in those days to us green, young soldiers,

On the 30th of September, 1861, we "invaded" Kentucky. Our medical staff being absent with their medical supplies, if they had any, Dr. Blackman, then Surgeon-in-Chief and General Medical Purveyor at Cincinnati, hired us an unemployed physician of Cincinnati as Surgeon, bought at the drug stores a mixed lot of medicinal stuff for us, found an ambulance standing near the railroad and not knowing to whom it belonged, gave it to us; and with 60 rounds of ammunition to a man, loaded a car. Equipped with everything but overcoats, the men boarded the train with light hearts to go to the front, for weary years of marching, toiling, fighting, waiting and enduring—faltering never, but with unqualified faith that when their soldiers' work should end there would remain no armed foe to strike at the flag of the Union; no one again to whisper disunion.

At Camp Dick Robinson we first came under the command of a professional soldier, George H. Thomas—McClellan, Rosencrans, Mitchell and other officers whom we knew, with military education, had been in civil life when the war broke out, but this our new and permanent commander, had known no other than barracks and frontier military life, and at sight he interested us: a large, substantial man, ruddy and strong, low voiced, quiet, shy, slow in speech and movement, plain in dress and manner, (he wore the eagle of his army rank, not the star on his shoulder), no show, no style, not a martinet; so practical looking, that his very appearance gave us a new and true idea of the hardworking, plodding, plain-living man the real soldier must be, and scattered our romantic visions of plumed knights and pictorial men at arms, with music and banners, and dazzling apparel, charging over prostrate foemen, and encamping in tented splendor when not achieving fame on gory fields of glory.

Our new Captain, our Chief for all the years to come of service, was not losing sleep devising master strokes and stupendous plans, quick and sure for crushing the rebellion. He hadn't dreamed of an anaconda coil with which to strangle the Confederacy—nor of a mighty host of the best drilled, disciplined, appointed and equipped soldiers the world had yet seen, as the requisite force for the beginning of successful war. He was aware only of the certainties; the hard toil and common labor of marching, making roads, and the wearisome daily round of active military life, stirred up once in awhile, by disagreeable, unpleasant and dangerous fighting, very uncertain and unintelligible to the actors.

The three months service was credited now to our regiment; its Colonel had been in service more than four months, and on this account, Gen. Thomas at once ordered it on detached service, which gave us a few weeks of very pleasant campaigning. We were bothered and annoyed by no daily orders, no pragmatical staff officer, no brigade or division superiors. We were an independent command, reconnoitering towards an indefinite point, or a movable outpost to guard passes and check invaders; to occupy Big Hill and then succor Wild Cat; marching and camping in those delightful Indian Summer days, through Kentucky's richest acres of wood, field, hillside and pasture. What an ovation at Richmond! With what open hearts and hands the people received us. Our two days picnic on the Fair grounds; the carriages and the wagonloads of baked meats, fowls, rich cake and pastry, and everything a Kentucky home kitchen could prepare for welcome guests.

Never before or since were the soldiers of the 17th entertained and made so much of, and so happy, as there, and yet a few months after, in the places of our feasting and glad welcoming cheer, our comrades of other regiments were driven before a pursuing foe, shot down, captured or fugitives, on the roads and in the fields, where we had with music and banners and in gala array held high carnival.

We camped in peace at the foot of Big Hill guarding the Pass, (so soon afterwards taken by the rebels with bloody disaster to our arms). Yet I was constantly warned by grave and well informed men, that large forces were already organized and at any time might be expected to try to execute their plan to retake and hold Kentucky and make it again "the dark and bloody ground" of the war.

In confirmation of this was our movement to the relief of Colonel Garrard at Wild Cat, during which were many anxious hours. If Zollicoffer took the Pass at Wild Cat and advanced to the Kentucky river, with 10,000 men, Thomas would then be unprepared for him. This must be prevented—Wild Cat must not be abandoned. The 17th started alone to its aid. Garrard was entrenched there with his new Kentucky regiment. Would he hold out till reinforced? I was not advised of any immediate support if I joined Garrard. But I believed the two regiments could hold out till Gen. Thomas could send forward enough of the new regiments then reporting to him to make all safe. But word came that Garrard was leaving, had left or would leave Wild Cat. How to establish communication with him was the question. He did not know of our approach, or that he would be succored. Just then our Chaplain, Fullerton, a faithful Christian knight, wise, brave and gentle, volunteered to find his way to Garrard and keep up communication. He went alone out in the darkness, and we marched the next day anxious and uncertain. On the way a man met me with a note from Col. Garrard, who had sent this messenger to deliver it to the first Union Commander he should meet. It was an alarming message. Zollicoffer with his whole force was at Pittman's Cross Roads, in front of the defenses at Wild Cat. Unless reinforced that day Garrard would at night abandon the post, and fall back across the river. And now all depended on whether Fullerton found him that day. When we bivouacked that night the field officers sat up and waited for the return of our messenger. After midnight the noble fellow came—he had not stayed to sleep or eat—had ridden both nights. Had been to Wild Cat. Garrard was still there, but had sent his transportation across the river and at dark intended to evacuate, but if we could reach him the next day, he'd try to hold till we came, but he thought both regiments too small a force to hold the pass. But Garrard had not known that Thomas could not afford to let Zollicoffer through that pass, and that he was bending every effort to hold it, and that both of our regiments had better be risked than the position abandoned. In other words the holding of Wild Cat was to save Kentucky from rebel invasion and make unnecessary defensive battles and loss of inestimable time.

We reached Wild Cat in time. For forty-eight hours the two regiments held the pass, till succor came. Said I not the 17th was a very useful and fortunate regiment? Many of the silent but equally heroic and more effective deeds of soldiers do not blazon the historic page, like the carnage, the flash and roar of of even useless battles—but they are the acts of accomplishment, which in the aggregate make war decisive and compel all sure results. Not the engagement, which military men call an "affair" rather than a battle, which afterwards occurred at Wild Cat and in which the 17th participated, prevented the rebel advance, but heroic Fullerton's ride and the prompt succor given by the 17th, made it impossible or at least impracticable.

I have not time here to detail our weary days and fruitless and not even tentative movements, for weeks and even months afterwards. Our regiment was no longer independent, under the single direction and few advisory orders of our trusted leader Thomas. Why reawaken our disagreeable recollection of such an outpost as Fishing Creek, and the mad order which sent our regiment, not to reconnoiter in force, but alone and unsupported, a day's march out to the Cumberland to occupy and fortify its north bank at Mill Springs, with Crittenden's and Zollicoffer's army of 15,000 men in camp on the south bank of the fordable river at that spot, a pistol shot away. This incident is buried out of sight in the history of the Mill Springs Campaign. It may be well to fetch it in view again. Here again was illustrated the luck of the 17th. It was plain that some one had blundered, and the order seemed madness. Was all our information false? Was there really a place near the Ford at Mill Springs unoccupied by the enemy, that a single regiment might take and hold against the many regiments and the batteries of the enemy there? I sent a squad of Woodford's cavalry out to see; sent with them the fearless, clear-headed Ricketts, who returned with them dissatisfied with their timid and imperfect scout. They had not gone to the ford, or near it. Still in ignorance of the true position and numbers of the enemy, I reluctantly and with apprehension obeyed the order, broke up camp and marched with transportation towards Mill Springs. I was too much oppressed by the peril into which this order was, by its execution, placing my regiment, to go on. I could not endure the feeling and was determined to have personal knowledge of the chances that might exist for its full execution, or whether as I believed, obedience to it was not marching my regiment into the enemy's camp to be surrendered. I resolved to halt my command and go to the river bank myself. I did so. I saw with amazement the long line of encampment and the myriad men on the other bank. Zollicoffer's whole army was there, and my orders were to set down before them and fortify within 200 yards of their line. To get back to my regiment quickly and withdraw it was imperative; I would gladly have surrendered to the rebel cavalry squad, which had come in by my side to take me, and within a few feet of me had cut off my line of escape, but it was better to risk the flight and pursuit to save the regiment, than further imperil it by submitting to capture. I escaped through the unparalleled heroism of Capt. Ricketts. When my riderless horse dashed by him, he calmly halted, dismounted and waited under hot fire to give me his horse, and walked away in a shower of balls to the shelter of a neighboring wood. Romance has no story of knightly deed so exquisite and full of more than human valor and unselfishness, as this of Ricketts' quiet heroism. Thus I escaped capture or death, and was enabled to reach the regiment, which I at once countermarched, and that night it returned safely to the slightly fortified position at Fishing Creek, it had left with such apprehension in the morning. Soon after the enemy crossed the river and built their strong fortifications on the spot where the 17th had been ordered to encamp and fortify inside their lines. It was from these works they advanced to attack Thomas, and twelve miles away from them, they met defeat and disaster.

This first substantial victory for our army, established the reputation of Thomas with the people as a first-class, practical soldier, who could and would fight to win, and who was thoroughly reliable. But his merits seemed unappreciated at Washington, and he was kept subordinate for years to inferior, and some even worthless superiors, many, the creatures of political or bureau influence at the Capital. If such Captains as Thomas had been chosen to lead early in the war—men who knew only the duty of constant and persistent warfare, with no special ambitions or visionary theories of the conduct of the war—but with entire, absolute confidence that war properly waged by the superior party, with such odds as favored the government so vastly in resources, population and the sacredness of its cause, it would not have needed a million of men and four years of struggle to conquer peace. The man who came nearest to Thomas in practical and useful qualities among our Generals, much through adventitious aids, became the foremost of all and President. If Grant had been born with the weight, size and quality of brain and the noble moral nature of Thomas, he would have deserved the fame and honors gained by him—without the disparaging reflection that luck mingled largely with merit in his advancement.

Having no time for detail I can but briefly suggest some noticeable facts and impressions of a few marked events of which our regiment was part, and in which there was special interest to us.

Pittsburgh Landing was reached by the Seventeenth, after the battle. The regiment had been usefully employed in guarding and bringing up Buell's Army Train over desperate roads. The question of a surprise at Shiloh is still worrying some of the Generals. Of little use the discussion. But there was some real and more important cause for surprise than the suddenness of Johnston's attack at Shiloh. The soldiers of Buell's Army were surprised, amazed, that they should have been loafing in pleasant camps in Kentucky and Tennessee, consuming rations and growing lazy, instead of moving forward to where the enemy was. Buell could have reached the Tennessee River before Grant. There was no reason why he did not join him many days before the battle and thus make Johnston's attack at Shiloh impracticable.

The soldiers under Buell had to get used to the surprises of dangerous loitering delays. But they were most surprised at the tremendous energy of Buell in his friendly contest of speed with Bragg, in the celebrated race on parallel roads, between the two armies, to Louisville in the Summer of 1862. During the war there was nothing so serio-comic as this race, nothing showing more skill than the efforts of each commander to prevent any conflict between the armies, and in seeing that the track of each was unobstructed and that water and forage were fairly divided.

By the courtesy of Bragg, under his escort, we reached Louisville in quiet.

What soldier under Buell will forget the horrible affair at Perryville, where 30,000 men stood idly by to see and hear the needless slaughter in McCook's unaided, neglected and even abandoned command, without firing a shot or moving a step in its relief?

Thomas and Crittenden's commands awaiting orders all afternoon, and the command to which we were attached at the battle field itself, within striking or supporting distance of every part of the battle line. Over us was some man, an acquaintance of Buell, holding a Lieutenant's, or maybe a Captain's commission in the Regular Army—we had never heard of him before, nor have we since. His name was Gilbert; was thought at first to be Buell's chief wagon master, but it appears Buell got him, somewhere or somehow, a militia Major General's commission and assigned him to the command of our corps (the 3rd). He was recognized as some kind of a de facto commander. The Seventeenth all of the afternoon of the battle, was in line on a hill at the point of which was a signal station. At its foot was Buell's peaceful tent, where we could occasionally see him bareheaded and in his shirt sleeves, comfortably at home. As it was a march of but some minutes from our position to McCook's right, where there was hard fighting, the men stood at arms in line, waiting orders to advance. After waiting by the hour, arms were stacked and the men stretched out on the ground on or near the line. The fight was raging fiercely. There was a feeling that we had Bragg's army in a sack and that he could not escape. Two o'clock came, Buell's headquarters quiet. Many of us dozing. The signal officer receives a dispatch from McCook which is quickly sent down the hill to Buell. Gen. Ward, then our Major, was at the signal station when this dispatch was received, and at once came and notified me that McCook had just sent to Buell that he was hard pressed and must be reinforced without delay; that he could not hold his position without aid. And now about half-past two, our brigade is in line ready for the order to advance. And there we waited for more than two hours, and about 5 o'clock received orders and passed over onto the battle-field and halted in a meadow, on the higher ground of which, 400 yards in front of us a very sharp, doubtful engagement was pending. As we halted aimlessly, Steedman rapidly passed us with his brigade (I presume without orders), reached the battle line in a moment, and had a fleeting chance to exchange shots with the enemy before darkness put an end to the fighting. We rested quietly that night on the battle-field, and kept on resting until Bragg had slipped away without molestation, with all his army, its transportation, supplies and Kentucky plunder.

The officers of Thomas' old division had enough of Buell. They were strong-headed, independent and apt to express themselves forcibly. They pulled together well, and when they kicked at incompetency, uselessness or overbearing insolence in a commander, they did it effectually. They had some experience in the choking off of intolerable superiors. At Corinth, "Port Royal" Sherman, as he was called, a dyspeptic, bad-mannered, unpleasant "Regular", was placed in command of the division. He became unbearable. One morning the brigade and regimental commanders of the division met at Gen. Bob McCook's quarters in caucus, and resolved to go together to Gen. Halleck and demand that Sherman be relieved. Gen. Speed S. Fry was appointed spokesman, McCook and Steedman to add a few words. It was an unusual and imposing cavalcade, all in full dress, wearing stars and eagles, thirteen in number. Gen. Halleck received us good humoredly, offered his cigars, and didn't wait for the addresses, heard only the object of our visit and promptly answered that he had anticipated us, and that as soon as possible he would deprive us of the valuable services of Port Royal Sherman as our commander. On our way we were handsomely entertained by Gen. Nelson (killed at Louisville by Davis), who, however, notified us that Buell would take pleasure in putting us all under arrest, as he should do.

And so it was. After Perryville, at Rolling Fork, some thirteen officers were detailed by Buell on a court martial. It met, with Gen. Steedman as President. In calling to order he announced that he believed that we had more important work than to sit as a police court, to try "drunks and disorderlies," and proposed that we investigate and act upon the military conduct of Buell as commander of our army. Agreed, nem. con. The court martial resolved that the thirteen officers would, as citizens, petition the President direct for the removal of Buell. A dispatch to that effect asking Buell's removal for the good of the service and the benefit of the country was written and signed by the thirteen officers. Col. Este, of the 14th Ohio, carried it to Louisville, from whence it was sent to the President, and in 48 hours Buell was relieved of the command.

We had hoped that Thomas, who had before this been tendered the command, would succeed him; though, next to Thomas, no commander could have been more welcome than that splendid soldier, Rosencrans, who soon became the idol of the army.

Let me here say of Buell, however, that he certainly was a very able man; intellectually and in professional knowledge and training, as well as ability to make and handle an army, vastly superior to nearly all the popular Generals of either army. Of all prominent in the service, of equal rank, in either army at that time, in the respect named, Buell, if not facile princeps was peer of the best. With all that, by reason of some great defect, his career as commander after Pittsburgh Landing was nearly useless and almost disastrous.

Buell was probably a victim to routine and immovable confidence in the approved methods and theories of Old World military science, so often found impracticable in the use of American volunteersoldiery and in the many novel conditions presented in the movements and battles of our civil war. As witness his delay of two weeks to bridge the inconsiderable Duck River on his march to Pittsburgh Landing, in contrast with Rosencrans' order to cross the broad Tennessee at Bridgeport, without boats or bridges, accomplished in twenty-four hours by his army, with such improvised means as the American soldiery quickly devised and successfully used.

I must leave unnoticed the pleasant interval until the battle of Stone River.

Here again was shown the remarkable good fortune of the Seventeenth. Our brigade, then commanded by Col. Walker, of the 31st Ohio (who is with us today), was unpleasantly but usefully employed, as usual, in bringing up part of the army train, but was hurried onto the field on the first day of the four days contest. Arriving at the center on the Murfreesborough pike about 3 o'clock p.m., when the firing on both sides had slackened, we moved quickly to the right, put out our skirmishers, and were soon in line, a succoring, fresh brigade, in the right place at the right moment. On our right, the cavalry in our full view, made for that day their last resistless charge through the cotton fields, just after our arrival, and swept the rebel left across the Wilkinson pike into the woods. Evening closed the battle for that day.

With his right rectified, and in firm and sure position, Rosencrans' lines were in sure possession of the field and confident of ultimate success, which came on Friday, three days after, with the repulse of Breckenridge's heroic but desperate charge against the center on that day.

Wednesday, Thursday and Friday our brigade was on the right front changing in position, until at the time of the Breckenridge attack our battery (Church's 4th Michigan) was near the Murfreesborough pike, closing on the right center, where, supported by the 17th and 31st, it did rapid and destructive work by its oblique fire on the attacking columns. When the battle ended Friday night our regiment had been in it and on the exposed front, with skirmishers out, three days and nights, and yet our casualties were barely mentionable.

I must pass by the uneventful Winter at Murfreesborough in camp, the Summer months at Triune, as pleasant to the soldier as mid-summer holidays in the woods to dwellers in cities. The Tullahoma movement, which brought the toils, movements, bivouacks and some of the blood-shed at Hoover's Gap, of active service. The Chattanooga campaign, in which we crossed the Tennessee River by swimming and on improvised rafts, boats, logs, boards, anything that would float; scaled the mountain ridges, crossed Lookout Mountain through Stevens' Gap, descending into McLemon's Cove, halting at Crawfish Springs, Gordon's Mills, and other well-remembered points, on or near the fatal field of Chickamauga.

Here for the first time the Seventeenth had a reverse of good fortune and met disaster. Eighteen years after, I, with vivid recollection, tell to my comrades the story of that disaster, and of the little event which lost the field, and in a moment fatefully decided the battle against us. First let me sketch briefly our movements during the two days of the battle.

Saturday morning (19th of Sept.) at day-light, our brigade, then under my command, after moving all night, (and in fact for three nights there had been no rest or sleep), was on the Rossville road, near Reed's bridge, on Chickamauga Creek, where there was skirmishing going on. We had halted for a few moments, that the men might try to make coffee. Before this could be done we had to move on to the left across the road and into the woods. Our division (Brannon's) by 8 o'clock was on the left of our army. By 10 o'clock the 2d and 3d Brigades and the 31st Ohio of our Brigade (the 1st) were heavily engaged. The other regiments of the Brigade were then thus disposed: The 82d Indiana supported the Brigade battery (Church's 4th Michigan) on the extreme left of the line. The 17th Ohio was in reserve and the 38th Ohio absent, having been detailed to guard the army train. It was not long before General Brannon called for all of his reserves. The 17th and 9th Ohio went to the front on the right of Vandever's Brigade with such spirit and dash that the enemy's line gave back at that point. At the same time, a rebel brigade attempted to move around Vandever's left and was repulsed with great loss, by the rapid and most effective firing of Church's Battery and a section of the 4th regular artillery well supported by the 82d Indiana. Before 4 p.m. Brannon's Division had won and held its position, and had checked Bragg's movement to turn our left and get between Rosencrans and Chattanooga. It was then moved to the right, following the battle as it passed in its wave towards the right of Thomas. Then knapsacks and blankets were piled up, (never to be seen again,) so as to give the men freer action. Just as the Brigade, moving to the right, passed into the road where our comrades of the 90th Ohio came out smoking from a hot fight, I met General Brannon just as General Thomas left the spot, and inquiring of him the ascertained results of the days fighting, he answered that Thomas had just said that it was all sixes and sevens, and that we were merely holding our ground on the left without any movement ordered, or any known future definite object or purpose, adding, "General Thomas knows no more of any plan or intention as to any further movements in the battle than we do, and has not known for sometime where the commanding General is, last hearing from him at Crawfish Spring, and I think that all we will do this evening yet, will be to move for position for the opening in the morning." My interpretation was, that we were fighting in the thick woods, having no design of our own and no knowledge of the position, strength or purpose of the enemy. We moved on to the right until dark when we bivouacked in a meadow, hoping for a little time for sleep; but about 9 o'clock the enemy attacked the Brigade just coming into position on the hill on our left, and there was a very stubborn and exciting engagement, lasting nearly an hour and ending with the repulse of the enemy. So overcome with fatigue and want of sleep were our men, that most of them quietly slept in line, under their stacked arms, through all the thunderous roar and fierce conflict of this battle, going on within pistol shot of them. I did not disturb them, they were in line and the skirmishers in our front would give us sufficient notice when we might be needed. At midnight we had to fall in and move to the left, and from then till daylight with drowsy steps we changed position, at short distances, always moving to the left and at each halt long enough, some slept and some threw up any kind of protection, at some points leaving tolerable breast-works for those who followed us in line.

At daylight we found ourselves in line, Croxton's Brigade and Reynold's Division on our left, and for about a half hour Van Cleef's Division on our right, succeeded by Wood's Division, which remained closed up on our right without interval until its fatal withdrawal. Along the left the enemy tentatively felt our lines all morning, while Longstreet's newly arrived forces were being placed for the attack upon the confused right; McCooks hapless corps then was up, worn out with hasty and most wearisome marching to complete the reknitting of Rosencrans' army. Up to 10 o'clock we felt that our second day would be a repetition of the first, a maintenance of our position, perhaps, nearer to Chattanooga and more defensible. For by this time all knew that we were acting on the defensive against an apparently superior force, fighting for position and safety, and not victory. But we felt confident that we could hold the field and be masters of our own movements thereon. But a little thing, a single mistake, a few words, often decides the fate of battles. Thus at Chickamauga, a mistake and improper order, hastily, injudiciously and weakly obeyed, broke our line, opened our center, and in a moment caused that which days of fiercest attack and most resolute struggling of the enemy would probably have failed in accomplishing, a simple order obliterated our center and left the reduced and disordered right wing helpless in the environment of fresh divisions of the enemy, and cut off from succor or support.

The story of this disaster is sad to record. Doubly so to me, for the responsibility I then assumed, by which I changed the so-called proverbial luck of the 17th, in passing through perils unscathed, when I declined to obey an order which would have carried the regiment and brigade away from the disaster and immediate peril. I never had a moment of more fearful responsibility than when a staff officer rode up and, in quick words, gave me the compliments of the General commanding, with the order to move my Brigade to the left and close up on Reynolds' Division, and while I was saying to him, "I am closed on Reynolds and engaged with the enemy," he touched his hat and spurred away. This was a fearful moment to me. I might have given the order a kind of literal obedience; that would have served for a poor technical defense of an act, which (while by the movement to the left and in rear of Reynolds, present security could be had for the Brigade,) yet would have opened the center to the enemy at the critical moment and point of the battle; and men of the 17th if I had obeyed that order, as the General commanding the Division on my right, a few moments later, did a similar one, your old good luck would have rested with you. I could have placed you in reserve of Reynolds; safely, for the time, in his rear. But there was no reason for the order, and I knew to obey it was fatal to our army. I was then engaged, my battery in action and fully served, skirmishers in from the front and firing along the line; Croxtons' Brigade close up on my left, he and General Reynolds in person within bailing distance of where I stood. There was no opening in the line on my left. Brannon's (our) Division was not in echelon, (as it is said General Rosencrans was informed it was,) but closed firmly up on Reynolds to the left, and on Wood to the right. If I obeyed this order, I would destroy this perfectly formed line, by opening a great gap in the center. Reynolds was near, the only Division commander I could consult. I sent Adjutant Davis at once to tell him of my orders and that I had decided not to obey, if he would approve my decision. Davis returned immediately with Reynolds' Adjutant General, who said that General Reynolds begged me not to obey the order, but stay, and he would take the responsibility. I stayed and sacrificed my Brigade. Could I but have known that the same order was sent to General Wood and that he would promptly obey it (as he did), how different would I have made the fortunes of my regiment and brigade, but how different and how much more disastrous might have been the result of the day.

But a few minutes elapsed before, with a great, rapid rush, passed quickly in my rear the whole of Wood's Division, and it was soon out of sight. A half hour after I had resolved to disobey this fatal order, there was not a company or squad in line, not a man of our army within a half mile on the right or rear of the three regiments and the battery of our Brigade, which was thus left thrust out, a little, thin, projecting line—a mere point—sticking out of the right of all the army then not routed. The appalling fact (against which I had hoped) was now apparent that the interval left by Wood's withdrawal was not to be closed, and a blunder had ended all designs and brought chaos.

To extricate the Brigade and save the battery at this moment seemed hopeless. I threw a line of skirmishers out on one flank and ordered Ward, commanding the 17th, to move by the right flank to the rising ground in the rear, and sent Adjutant Davis to order Church to follow the 17th, with his battery, and take position on the rising ground in rear of Reynolds' right requesting Davis to stay with and guide the battery to the designated point.

The 31st Ohio and 82d Indiana I wished to hold where we were until the skirmishers were driven in. There was no time to execute any movement. The 17th had just prepared to move, and the order just reached the battery when our skirmishers came flying in, the enemies' lines closely following, while the concentrated force of their batteries made the place of the 17th impossible to live in. Its lines literally crumbled and in fragments were thrown to the rear. To try further to save the guns of the battery, I ordered the 82d Indiana forward. It, too, with the 31st Ohio, went to pieces. Five guns of the battery were taken and thus in a few moments Regiments and Brigade were dissolved, and during the balance of the day the integrity of neither was restored. The right of the army was gone. McCook and Crittenden were beaten off the field entirely, and from that on till night, the left, under Thomas, stayed sullenly and stubbornly on the field, obstructing all of Longstreet's and Bragg's attempts against it, and immovable as the hill on which they fought was its front against the foe.

That night and the next morning shattered regiments, broken brigades and dissolved divisions were reunited and restored, and the next day our army, reformed at Rossville and Chattanooga Creek, entirely recovered from panic disorder, seemed in good condition for another battle. There was to be no more fighting there. A day or two after, at night, the army was withdrawn to Chattanooga. Our Brigade was left at the creek as rear-guard, while the whole army and transportations passed in to Chattanooga. In the dawn we were alone, and under our orders withdrew bringing up the rear, and the 17th was the last regiment of Rosencrans' army to enter Chattanooga.

The last act of great interest and importance of the Regiment, while under my command, was its participation in the successful cooping of Brown's Ferry, one of the boldest movements, of the war; opening up the Wauhatchie Valley to Bridgeport as a line for supplies, and allowing Hooker to enter and hold Look-out Valley.

The further history of the Regiment, the fine record it made in the battle of Mission Ridge, the Atlanta campaign, the march to the sea, and its final muster out at the close of the war, must be told by some of you, my comrades, who stayed and went through all to the close; for after some months of suffering from chronic disease, impairing my usefulness in the service, I deemed it best to retire and take my seat in the Ohio Senate, to which I had been elected while in the field, and so in November, 1863, I severed my connection with the Regiment and in doing so ended relations with you, my comrades, that were very dear to me, and so agreeable and pleasant that not one thing is remembered as marring them, and not a single recollection forbidding my saying that they were the happiest I every enjoyed, outside of those of the family,

It is difficult to make any exact statement of the number enrolled in the regiment and to account for them accurately. In the table of Ohio Infantry Organization in Reid's Ohio in the War, the original strength of the 17th is given as 852, an error which was carried on the Brigade rolls for some time in the field, and occurring by reason of one of the companies, G, not having been mustered in until it had been in service two or three months. Its enrollment added to the 852 in this table, gives the true-original strength of the Regiment, 939. It would take much time to ascertain from the copies of the rolls in the Adjutant General's office the number of these originally enlisted men, who re-enlisted when their terms of service expired, as veterans for further service in the Regiment continued as a veteran regiment, and I can only give a tolerably close estimate of its strength when originally mustered, Sep. 30, 1861, and when mustered out July 26, 1865:

Originally enrolled.....	939
Recruits and new enlistments for veteran service.....	415
Total enrolled.....	1,354
Casualties—Killed in battle.....	52
Died of wounds and sickness.....	134
Transferred and prisoners.....	65
Deserters.....	40
Discharged on expiration of term of service and for disability and by Resignation.....	440-731
Mustered out at close of war.....	623

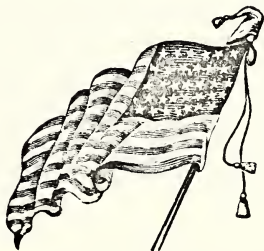

While this statement is only approximately correct, I think it is practically so, perhaps as nearly so as will be made.

What a record of good fortune! Nearly four years in constant, active service; in the front of battle in some of the most important and destructive engagements of the war; subjected all the time to the exposures of daily duties of the camp and field life of a marching regiment in front of the enemy, and with so small a percentage of casualties by death, capture, sickness, desertion and discharges.

Life's last bivouac will soon lose its weary march, when the veteran mustering officer, Death, discharges us, may there be against each name on the muster out rolls, the last endorsement given the worthy soldier; "Honorably discharged. Full pay due this man to date of discharge; no charges or deductions,"

Andy Bauman's Generosity.

The Lancaster, Ohio, "Gazette" in speaking of our first reunion, says "Andy Bauman, one of Lancaster's most public spirited citizens and an individual whose enterprise and activity on all occasions of general interest or moment can be relied upon, was on deck, you bet! Wednesday evening he threw open his elegant dining hall, and sumptuously banqueted all the ex-soldiers who could be accommodated; freezer after freezer of ice cream was demolished, while cakes of numerous kinds, candies, bon bons, nuts, cold meats, lemonade and ices, were brought in and stored away by the cord, almost. Andy was in his glory, and the boys were loud and vigorous in his praise. The average citizen might well learn a lesson from Mr. Bauman's munificence and generosity. Such men make big cities. A vote of thanks was tendered him, and the old hall was made to ring with the old Regiment's war songs, the "Star Spangled Banner," "Rally Round the Flag," "John Brown's Body," and many others. Captain Clark tooted the reveille, and the entire crowd were jocose, noisy and happy, and dispersed for the night, with a feeling of gratitude for their genial, jolly, hospitable host, that will live as long as life lasts."

INCIDENTS AND ANECDOTES

CONTRIBUTED BY MEMBERS OF THE REGIMENT.

ROLL OF HONOR.

Just after the battle of Stone River, while we lay in camp at Murfreesborough, Tennessee, a battalion of mounted infantry was organized, by selecting men from each company of our regiment, and others. Sergt. Henry H. Berry, Corporal James B. Hancock, Privates, David Houck, Samuel Holliday, Uriah H. Emick, and Thomas B. Osborn, Company B, were among those selected from our regiment. The organization was called the "Roll of Honor" and was commanded by Lieut. Col. Choate of the 38th O. V. I. Captain Ezra Ricketts, Company F, commanded those, selected from our regiment. This troop was expected to scout, keep in the front, get all the information they could about the rebel's strength, position and intentions, harass the enemy's outposts, and keep in active duty all the time. Uriah H. Emick says: "While we lay at Triune, Tennessee, about seventy of the battalion, commanded by Colonel Choate, went south on the pike to Eagleville, Tennessee. Our company commanded by Captain Ricketts, only numbered eighteen that day, were about one mile in advance, and had three of our boys about one-fourth mile in advance of us. Just as we were getting out of Eagleville, on south side, we met the rebel's advance, who outnumbered us two to one; but we drove them back, until they were reinforced; then we formed a line and had a sharp skirmish with them. They pressed us hard, and when we were not more than thirty steps away, Captain Ricketts ordered us to fix bayonets and charge, which we did, and drove them back about a quarter of a mile around a curve in the road and into the timber, but being largely reinforced, they came after us, and we fell back to our former position, thinking we could hold them in check, until the balance of the battalion came to our assistance. However, they had formed in line in the northern edge of town, as soon as they heard us skirmishing, thinking we would join them, but as we did not, they advanced to us and we met in the town where no line could be formed, and a mixed fight ensued, in which we were routed and driven about a mile, on a good lively gallop. One of our boys was knocked off his horse, his foot caught in the stirrup, and he was dragged along with his head on the ground for some distance. When he got lose, the rebels were within ten or fifteen steps of us. I saw one of them shoot him in the thigh, just then we turned on them and checked them, got our wounded man and took him to camp with us."

Captain Oliver B. Brandt, Company H, writes the following:

"At the battle of Chickamauga, Georgia, September 20th, 1863, when we were routed by the fierce onslaught of the enemy in the morning, and had fallen back a short distance, and halted; Colonel Durbin Ward was heard to say, "Where is my horse? I want a horse." Some member of our regiment called out in a clear voice, amid the clash of arms, "Oh my kingdom for a horse," at which a cheer went up, that made the boys rally to the colors. A charge was made, and our battery recaptured, the boys pulling the guns off by hand. Later we were driven back to the hill. When Longstreet made his famous charge near the close of the day, I was captured and taken to Richmond, Virginia, arriving there September 28th 1863, remained there until April 20th 1864, when I was transported to Macon, Georgia. There I remained until July, 1864, when I was among the six hundred who were taken to Charleston, South Carolina, and placed under the fire of our guns for three months. We were then transported to Columbia, South Carolina. Here I made my escape, traveling about two hundred miles south. Near Waynesborough, Georgia. I was recaptured taken back to Columbia, South Carolina and placed in jail for a short time, then returned to the prisoners camp there. I was transferred to Charlotte, North Carolina. February 20th, 1865, again made my escape by running the guard lines; was recaptured near East Tennessee and sent to Richmond, Virginia, where I was finally paroled and sent north, March 13th. 1865."

Doctor David D. Benedict, our Surgeon, tells the Following:

"While on our march to the sea, one of the boys dropped back and asked for a ticket to the ambulance. Being tired myself, I asked him to ride my horse, while I took his gun and charged through the Regiment to Company A, in the front, and marched along with the rest. After I thought the boy had enjoyed my horse long enough, I attempted to return; when the boys stopped me and what is more, made me march with them until we went into camp. Guess I marched and carried a musket about six miles. I enjoyed the joke with the rest.

Once when we were in camp, the boys got into the habit of coming with their tin cups and asking for some Castor Oil, claiming they were not well, but using it to grease their shoes. One day John Guseman, Company A, boasted that he would go the next morning and get oil enough to grease a dozen pair. Some of his comrades came and gave me the hint. At "Surgeons Call," up he came, cup in hand, and quite a crowd with him. Well, I said, "What's the matter with you?" "Oh, I don't feel very well and think I need a big dose of Castor Oil," I examined his tongue, felt his pulse, and said "You don't need any medicine." "Yes I do" said he. I turned to George L. Green, the Hospital Steward and said, "George pour out two ounces of Castor Oil in the graduate." Taking it, I went to John and said, "Down with it then," and I made him take it. The boys used to ask him how the oil felt on his shoes. By the way, he was a good friend of mine, and I will tell how he got even with me, by one of the neatest tricks I ever saw. Somewhere in the Carolinas John came to my quarters, apparently in great distress, holding his left hand in his right, grunting as if nearly killed. On examining (not very critically,) it looked as though he had run a piece of rail or large sliver in his wrist. I got my instruments out around it carefully, got a good hold with the forceps, gave a pull, when he let up his thumb, and out came one of those long, slender pine needles, about fifteen inches in length. They had a large head and tapered to a small point. John had passed the pine needle through a small hole made in the tough skin on his left hand near the wrist, and then up his sleeve, holding his right thumb over the point where it entered. The deception was complete. A large crowd had gathered and enjoyed the joke with me. It was so cute and well played, that I got him to try it on Dr. Fowler, which he did, successfully.

Once when we were marching in Georgia, we had been on the move all night, and of course we were very sleepy. I lay down by the side of a fence and was soon fast asleep. Some one shook me and said "get up you are on fire;" sure enough I was, and lost the tail of my old blue army overcoat.

After we had gone into camp at Fayetteville, North Carolina, the Head Quarter's team went out after forage. As they drove past my quarters "Sam Walker," the wagoner, who, by the way was the wag of the Regiment, said "Doc. what shall I bring you." "Oh, peanuts of course." They were unsuccessful in forage, but on his return Sam dumped in front of my tent some fifteen or twenty large bags of peanuts, calling out "Here's your rations Doc". The boys had peanuts at "Surgeons Call" next morning.

Jacob P. Sain, Company B, Writes as Follows:

No other march is so indelibly scarred into my memory as the march to the battle field of Mill Springs, Kentucky. We waded Fishing Creek January 19th, 1862, and that bath makes a cold chill amble up and down my spine to this day, whenever I think of it. The dreary march to the rebel entrenchments at the Cumberland River, will long live in my memory. Another march I now recall, after the evacuation of Corinth, Mississippi, which tried the endurance of the best of them.

The awkward man of Company B was Peter G. Shoemaker, I have known him to fall down, while standing still, and it was positively dangerous to march any place near him.

Then there was that pugnacious carpet knight, George Harris, Company B, who would brandish his butcher knife, and say "Damn the seceshers," but the first bullet that whistled over our heads at Wild Cat, Kentucky, caused him to dive into a big cracker box, where his titanic mud hooks only, were visible.

I remember the gigantic negro who sat on the opposite side of Rockcastle River and who sang "Dixie." I recall a stanza.

"Old *Jollywhopper am a mighty mean man,
For he goes around de country burning up de fences,
Look away, look away, and see de flag.
Then throw away de tin, and bundle up de copper,
And damn such a man as old Jollywhopper,
Look away, look away Dixie Land.
Lord I wish I was in glory, away, away,
In de glorious land I take my stand,
To live and die in de Union band,
Away, away, look away and see de flag."

He stayed with our Regiment a while, then disappeared.

There were the twins, Abner and Ezra Cadwallader, of Company E. One day General Schoepf, who commanded our brigade, having heard of them came to see them. He said "Where are dem Catwholleper poys?" After meeting them, he thus addressed them. "Poys tont be ashamed of dem pig noses, Bon-aparte had a pig nose, and I haf a pig nose myself."

There was one man who was perennially hungry, but he never went hungry long while there was anything in the "Confederacy." He was my brother William R. Sain, Company B. When Bill couldn't get a chicken, you could bet your life they were scarce.

Then there was the jovial Wilson S. Stutor, Company B. The harder it rained while we were marching the louder he sang.

In the railroad mash up near Pataskala, Ohio, I was sitting in a seat, with a lady who was holding a baby in her arms. While the car was bumping over the ties, she jumped up and was going to throw the baby out of the window, but I caught her in time and made her sit down. When the train stopped I tried to get out at the door but the platforms being all mashed together, I had to crawl out at a window. There were three men fast at the front end of the car, and two at the other end. It was a horrible sight.

Rebel Treatment of Wounded Prisoners.

William K. Dixon, Company I, says he, with others, was wounded and captured at Chickamauga, September 20th, 1863. He lay where he fell for two days and was then taken to a log house that was full of our wounded prisoners, forty-five being in and around the house. He was laid in the front yard and they all remained there about a week, with rations of one pint of corn meal gruel once a day. The wounds were not dressed until the wounded were sent into our lines at Chattanooga, Tennessee, and many died before that time. Some three or four days after the battle, the former occupants, a man and woman, returned to the house with an ox team to move their effects. The woman abused the wounded, and threatened to take the axe and knock their brains out, all because they had made bandages for their wounds of anything they could find in the house.

Wilson S. Stutor, Company B, writes as follows:

The first Christmas we had in the army was at Danville, Kentucky. The Dutch tent in Company G, was making a great noise at night, having imbibed freely during the day. I proposed to Isaac Grove, Company B, to have some fun with them and he agreed; so after the lights were out and all was quiet, we both threw clubs at once, among them. One of them must have been hit and thought it was one of his tent-mates that hit him, for they all got into a fight, the tent fell down and they were all put in the guard house.

When we made a reconnoissance below Somerset, Kentucky, in the direction of Mill Springs, as we were marching along, a woman with six children got on a fence and she said "Oh de Lord, heah's all de men of de Norf come down heah."

While in camp at Somerset, Kentucky, Isaac Grove, David and Solomon Stoneburner and Samuel Funk, Company B, put boards on our chimney flues, which made them smoke badly.

When we crossed Fishing Creek, all we had to eat was mush and molasses. There was snow on the ground; I took off my clothes made a bundle of them, my haversack, canteen, blanket and cartridge box; put it on the end of my gun and started into the creek. The swift current threw me off my feet twice, but finally I got across and dressed. Then we hurried through the mud half knee deep, to the battle field. Rations were very scarce and I was hungry. "Kate" Ruffner had a piece of meat about four inches square, and divided it with me about 2 a. m. I never tasted turkey or chicken that was half so sweet as that piece of fat meat; we had been about twenty-four hours without food or sleep, marching through mud.

January 1st, 1863 at Stone River, Tennessee, Thomas Osborn, Company B, found a Belgian rifle. He crawled to a tree in front of us to play sharp-shooter; but a rebel sharp-shooter in another tree, shot Tom's canteen strap half off his shoulder, and Tom came back and said he had enough sharp-shooting for that time.

While we lay at Gallatin, Tennessee, some of Company A boys got the 82nd Indiana Regiment out to look at an eclipse of the moon. While they were thus engaged, other Company A boys were helping themselves to frying pans, coffee pots, etc., belonging to the 82nd Indiana boys.

At Murfreesborough, Tennessee, camp, William C. Williams, Company B, went to the doctor for toothache, the doctor gave him some blue mass pills, which made Cal very mad. At the same camp Bill Sain got a mess pan full of sauerkraut from his brother Samuel M. Sain, who was sutler of the 38th Regiment, O. V. I., and ate so much of it, that he was sick in the night, and threw it up; and there was sauerkraut all over Company B's quarters next morning.

At Triune, Tennessee, Major Butterfield made the line officers drill with guns. I never saw such an awkward lot of recruits; how the Major would slap them with his sword, to get them in line.

At Tusculum, Alabama, some of our boys went into the big spring to swim, but jumped out quickly, as the water was ice cold.

On the road to Huntsville, Alabama, James H. Bogle, Company B, ate twelve large roasting ears at one meal, which made him sick.

While camped at the Tennessee River, one of Company F boys swam across it, got two canteens full of spring water on the other side, put them around his neck, and swam back to us; the river must have been nearly a mile wide at this point.

Lieutenant Aaron P. Ashbrook and First Sergeant Jacob M. Ruffner, Company B, slept together, and the Lieutenant told me, that "Kate" never went to sleep without first kissing him good night. Ruffner, although gentle and childlike, was the bravest man I ever saw.

While in camp at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1862, many of our Northern friends visited us. One of them asked Henry Myers, Company K, to show him a body louse. Hen. found one on his blouse, put it on his hand for his friend to look at; when it started to crawl off, Hen. put it in his bosom.

We got some apple jack at Crab Orchard, Kentucky, in 1862 and Charles B. Shrieves and Henry W. Young, Company B, wanted to fight, Captain Stinchcomb stopped the company, had them form a ring, and told the two boys to fight it out; but they would not, so when we got to camp he made them carry a rail for punishment. It was here, that Samuel Funk, Isaac Grove, William R. Sain, Company B, and I went into a cave, to explore it; we crawled in, perhaps one hundred yards all right, but in coming out, Sain was behind and got fast in a hole. I said, "Bill, I saw bear and wolf tracks back in the cave behind you." Bill said "Shut up you fool, you know I am fast; if I was out of here I would thump you." Such twisting, grunting and growling as he did, was amusing, but he finally got out all right.

The night before we pitched our tents, just west of the brick depot, at Chattanooga, Tennessee we all had a pile of boards to fix our tents with, and had to sleep on them to prevent their being stolen. About 10 p. m., Henry Canode, Company K, came to me and told me to get up, that there was a wagon train coming in, and we would get something to eat; I got up and we started in the direction of the river. When we had gone perhaps one hundred and fifty yards from the regiment, we met the wagons and Hen. climbed into one and handed me the largest piece of side meat I ever saw; he also got a piece and we started for camp. I had to drag my piece, as it was too big to carry. When I got to camp with it, I had my bunk-mates, John Hunsaker and George H. Godden, Company B, get up and help pile our boards on the meat. Then I went back and got a box of crackers and put it by the side of our bed. I told John and George that some one would steal them there, and sure enough they were gone when we awoke the next morning. I divided the meat among the boys, hence none was found when the search was made for it. The next day we put up our tents, and dug cellars under them. Our mess had one just large enough to hold a cracker box, and one night when there was a train unloading, Hunsaker got a box of crackers and brought it to us. We soon had it hid in the cellar and our bed made on top. There were eighty boxes of crackers, eighteen barrels of sugar, twenty sacks coffee, and four or five boxes of desiccated potatoes, stolen that night. The potatoes were buried out on the "color line" and when it rained, the potatoes absorbed the water and swelled up, raising the earth. We used to go out and dance on the mounds, thus raised; but it was no use, they came up anyhow. Of all the stuff stolen that night, only one half bag of coffee was found, and I think that was in Company C.

While camped on Mission Ridge, Tennessee, George H. Godden had sore eyes, and could not find his shoes in the morning at roll call; for quite a while George played that game.

At Ringgold, Georgia, Henry H. Berry and William F. Peyton, Company B died with the varioloid; Urs Emch, also had it.

At the battle of Resaca, Georgia, after we charged down that hill to the creek; just back and to the right of me, lay poor Sullivan F. Stevens, Company E with his leg torn off by a piece of a shell, begging the boys to shoot him and end his misery; he bled to death. Back of him lay John Leisy, Company B, wounded in the head, also in the leg, which was afterward amputated. George H. Godden, Company B, had his shoe knocked off. He told me when his shoe flew off he thought it was his foot, but he did not have courage to look and see whether it was gone or not.

June 18th, 1864 before the rebels got to Kenesaw Mountain it rained hard Samuel M. Spittler and John A. Mesnard, Company B, took a couple of rails and shovels, crawled to the top of the rise, in our front, and made a gopher hole, by lying down flat, while they worked; of course they were all covered with mud. About 4 p. m., Thomas Clangy's knapsack was struck by a bullet; it turned him around and I don't think he ever got over the fright.

While in the ditch in front of Kenesaw Mountain, William R. Sain built a fire in the ditch to make coffee. The rebel sharp-shooters saw the smoke and shot at it; the ball passing just over Bill's shoulder. He kicked the fire out, when Isaac Grove hollowed out, "Give Bill Sain some coffee." This is where "Old Leather Breeches," shelled the Mountain, while the ladies from Atlanta were on the top; they had come out to see us shelled. One day while here, William C. Williams was peeping out from under the dog tents we had stretched over the trenches to protect us from the hot sun. While he was looking I hit him in the rear with a stone, at the same time making the sound of a whizzing musket ball, with my mouth. Cal threw his hand on the part hit, fell back in the ditch and grew very pale; he thought he was wounded.

We found the skeleton of a rebel militiaman, hung with a hickory withe, near the Chattahoochee River. His discharge was found in his pocket.

At the battle of Jonesborough, Georgia, the 14th O. V. V. I. fell back out of the woods, after charging on the enemy. When they saw that our brigade were supporting the charging column, and heard the cheers sent up, they stopped, rallied on their colorbearer, charged on the Rebels again, and took their works.

I found a nice pair of shoes, one day while foraging. The tops were leather, with wooden soles. I thought them a prize, so I threw away a tolerably good pair and walked to camp. The next day I was so stiff that I could not walk. Then I hunted up an old pair of army shoes. The boys tormented me enough about those wooden soled shoes.

One day while foraging in Georgia we found some hogs. I shot and killed a large one. A Company I boy shot one, but did not kill it. The hog took after him, and they chased each other around a big tree for some time, the Company I boy hollowing all the time for me to shoot the hog; but it was too much fun for me. The boy kept hollowing "Sick, get out," but after a while the hog got weak from loss of blood and stopped, and the boy loaded his gun and killed it. He then came to me, mad, and said I was a fool for not helping him.

William R. Sain, John Shaffner, Urs Emch, Company B, and I had been detailed to forage. We did not find anything until in the afternoon, when we found a lot of meat buried, which we dug up and took with us. We also found some bee hives which we robbed of honey. Sain being somewhat hungry for honey, did not notice the bee that went into his mouth with a nice lump, until the bee had made its presence known by stinging him on the root of his tongue. William was sure it was a Rebel bee.

After we had crossed the Savannah River into South Carolina, Tom Osborn, Frederick Leisy, Company B, and I started out one morning ahead of the army. About 2 p. m. we asked some darkies how far the army was behind us. They said "De Lord, chile de army am twenty-five miles from here." The troops had gone in an opposite direction, from what we thought they would. It had been raining nearly all day, so we drew the loads out of our guns, wiped them dry, reloaded, and got ready for any emergency. All agreed that if we were attacked, we would die together. We marched until 2 a. m. lay down and slept until daylight, then started again on our march. We finally overtook our regiment, but were gone two days and three nights, and the boys thought we had been captured.

At Goldsborough, North Carolina, Frank Andrews, Company K, the color bearer had Miles N. Woodward, Company H, John E. Hollopeter Company C, and myself, detailed as color guards.

George H. Godden, Company B, relates the Following.

In 1861, while we lay at Crab Orchard, Kentucky, in an old ware house, or hotel, the boys found two or three barrels of molasses and one of cherry bounce, in the cellar. Some made several trips for themselves and friends, to the cellar for wine and molasses, and as they had to crawl through a window in the cellar to get it, more or less molasses was spilled on the window sill, which daubed the boys up considerably. The owner of the wine and molasses, complained to General Schoepf, commander of our brigade. While he was investigating the matter, he saw Calvin Messerly, Company K, besmeared from head to foot. The German officer said to him. "Where you got dot molasses? Look me in the eye. You bees a tief; you bees a tief at home," then giving him a slap on the side of the head, had him put in the guard house. He then gave orders for all Captains to have their companies fall in line, and report to him all who took molasses or wine. Captain Stinchcomb, Company B, in a loud voice, commanded his company to fall in. The boys did not know what was up, but obeyed, some of us having molasses on our whiskers and clothes. The Captain, nearly laughing said, "Company B. it has been reported to me that some boys in our regiment have been stealing cherry bounce and molasses out of the cellar below us, and it is my duty to see if any of my boys have." He then commanded, "All you boys who stole any of that molasses or wine step two paces to the front." Not one stepped out. Then smiling he said, "That's right, I'm glad none of my boys stole any. Go to your quarters."

At Somerset, Kentucky, one dark night, while John Van Arce, Company B, was on picket, and everything still as death, the boys heard him command, "Halt who comes there" (no reply) "Halt who comes there," (no answer,) John then said, "I'll halt you but once more." At that instant a cow bawled, and John saw his mistake. He laughed heartily, as did also the balance of the boys, who were roused by John's loud command for the cow to halt, and were ready for the supposed advancing rebels. Captain Stinchcomb ran up to John and said "You ought to know better, the enemy are just over the hill there."

While at Corinth, Mississippi, we drew molasses and were sitting around eating crackers and molasses out of our tin pans and cups. William C. Holliday, Company B, had drawn his share and also that of his brother, Jacob, who was on duty at the time. While sitting by a log, with the molasses in a pan on the ground, along came Peter G. Shoemaker, Company B, and stepped over the log, directly into the pan of molasses, which caused Holliday to remark, with a doleful look at Shoemaker, "Now poor Jacob won't have any."

Wesley P. Davis, Company B, received a letter from home, the reading of which made him look very sad and gloomy, and the boys who noticed him, thought he had received tidings of the death of a near relative. One of the boys approached him gently, and asked him if any of his relatives had died. He said "no, but Jen has lost her colt." Wes. never heard the last of "Jen has lost her colt," while he was in the army.

After the battle of Mission Ridge, Tennessee, being shoeless, I went over the battle field, looking for a shoe that would fit me, after walking around a good deal, where many rebels had fallen, I saw a shoe that looked pretty good, which I thought was small enough for me, and stooped to pick it up, I did not take it however, for I discovered there was a foot already in it, the "reb." having been buried, all except his foot. I concluded I did not need a shoe very badly after all, so left it on the buried "reb."

Wilson S. Stutor, Company B, went out foraging for food, one wet day, and going into a house to get a corn pone baked, and to dry off, he set his gun down, just inside the door. While standing in front of the fire, in the big old fashioned fire place, drying his clothes and waiting for the pone to bake, in came two soldiers, dressed in blue, who got between Wils. and his gun and demanded his surrender, Wils. thinking them rebels in disguise, said "I guess I'll have to." The supposed "rebs." then said "Fork over that watch," which was done. They then said, "We want all you have." Wils. told them, they had all. After keeping him in painful suspense a while, they burst out laughing, returned the watch, and told Wils. they belonged to the Twentieth corps. Wils. always kept his gun within reach, after that experience.

Woodson W. Brock. Company K, Writes.

I think it was the night after we passed through Louisville, Georgia, that some of Company K had been out foraging, bringing in several canteens full of apple jack, from which some of the boys got gloriously drunk. Colonel Showers found that his horse's tail had been shaved that night and offered $500 for the guilty party, as he valued the horse very highly, having picked it up in the country. I think it was a grey stallion. No one knew who did it, but the applejack indicated that the guilty boys were in Company K; and after that, while marching, some one would ask "Who shaved the Colonel's horse's tail?" The answer was always, "Company K."

February 26th, 1865, while marching through South Carolina, twenty-eight of our regiment, viz. Captain Levi Cornwell, Company A, Lieutenant Joseph W. James, Company K, First Sergeant, James E. Larimer, Company A, Corporals Joseph Weiland, Company D, Josiah F. Reames, Company E, and Jacob Schopp, Company F, Privates, Frederick Myers, Company A, Joshua Kimble, Company D, William H. Montgomery, Wilson Talbott, Company K, and myself, with seventeen others whose names I have forgotten, started on a foraging expedition. We crossed the Catawba River on a pontoon bridge, ahead of our infantry, on the Lancaster, South Carolina, road; our cavalry were ahead of us. We camped at a large frame house on left side of road, where our cavalry had camped. We got a nice lot of hams, shoulders, beans, etc. February 27th, 1865, one member from each company was detailed to take the forage back to the Regiment. I was sent back with the others. I found an old blind, worn-out horse, that the cavalry had left, and loaded him with meat. I got a young darkie to carry a sack of beans, and we started. Old blindy was slow, and the other boys got far ahead of me. It had been raining, the roads were very muddy, and while going up a steep hill, close by a deep ditch, old blindy made a miss step and tumbled into the ditch on top of the meat with his feet sticking up. After considerable work and anxiety, old blindy was gotten on his feet and the muddy meat loaded again. In due time we came up to the rest of the boys, who were camped on a hill near the river. We waited here for our Regiment and in the afternoon the others of our foraging party joined us, with about fifty Negroes, big, little, old, young, all sizes and kinds, loaded with rations. Later, our Regiment came up and were made glad by the results of our exploit. At night we camped at the forks of roads, one leading to Lancaster, South Carolina, the other east of that point. February 28th, 1865. Captain Cornwell, with the same men he had on the 26th, started on the Lancaster, South Carolina, road, went to the place where we obtained the meat, etc, that date; there we got an old colored man to pilot us across the country to an island in the Catawba River, where we thought the "Johnnies" might have some cattle and forage hid; but in this we were mistaken. We stopped for the night at a large frame house. There were two young ladies there who had come from Georgia, to get away from Sherman's Bummers. We put pickets out for the night, and when it was time for the second relief, I went to the negro cabins to find the boys. There I saw a comic sight. A young black fellow was pounding on an old tin pan, and the boys were dancing with some old fat wenches, and having a royal good time. When the boys tired of this fun we went to another cabin and had some taffy, but it was not very good. We next went to the old Master's mansion, where we were entertained by the two young ladies referred to, until quite a late hour. They played on the piano, sang rebel songs for us, and smiled their sweetest for the benefit of our jolly Captain Cornwell and Lieutenant James. They found us to be quite different from what they thought Sherman's Bummers were. Sergeant Larimer killed the dogs, after making them howl at a desperate rate. Early on the morning of March 1st, 1865, we started, intending to stop at Lancaster at night, and wait there until our troops overtook us. We arrived there about 1 p. m. tired and hungry with a fine lot of forage. We had a horse and a mule loaded with twenty-five chickens, eggs, corn meal and other nice things. Each one of us was loaded with meat or beans. A citizen living near Lancaster told us there were rebels in town, but we did not believe it, when we got to the first house in the town, Capt. Cornwell asked the woman of the house, if there were any rebels in town, she said "no." Looking in her house, I saw "Johnnies" sitting around unarmed, but did not realize who they were, until we had gone a few rods past, when we heard the rebel yell, and two Brigades of rebel Cavalry, were after us. We formed line and gave them the contents of our guns, but they were too many for us, four or five thousand against twenty-eight, so we fell back into some underbrush, down across a creek and into the woods, knowing that if we kept the road, we would all be captured. The three boys, who had the horse and mule referred to, were captured. Frederick Myers Company A, and Corporal Schopp Company F, were missing and mourned for, by us as dead; but to my relief, I met Schopp at Lancaster, Ohio, at the close of the war, with an empty sleeve, and he showed us where they had shot him five times; but being of a plucky nature he did not die. We waited in the woods until quite late in the night and finally came to a cabin. We ventured to make ourselves known to an old negro man, who piloted us out to Jim Massey's plantation, on the main road, seven miles from Lancaster. After parching some corn and eating enough of it to quiet our hunger, we lay down and slept about three hours, when the Captain called us. A negro woman had cooked us a nice pot of beans, and for breakfast, our entire bill of fare was beans. We started before it was light, March 2nd, 1865, expecting to meet our troops soon, but to our grief we learned that they had taken the other road, when we left them, and thus had two days start of us. Our only hope now, was to reach our army before the rebel cavalry could catch us, so we did not lose much time. We came to where an old negro had baked a corn pone, and though we pitied the poor old man, we loved his pone and found it a present help in time of need. About 1 p. m. we came to a cabin where some negroes had just got a pot of lye hominy in good shape, we found a gourd, filled it with hominy, which we ate as we marched. Just as it began to grow dark we reached the camp of the First Division of our corps. We were too tired to go further, so when we were a safe distance inside our picket line, we lay down and slept. We had marched forty-five miles that day, and had only been inside our picket line about an hour, when the rebel cavalry came up, but finding more than our foragers, they left. March 3rd, 1865, we overtook our regiment, and when they saw us, they raised the Yankee yell of joy, for they had heard our skirmish at Lancaster, and supposed we had been all captured or killed.

Thomas C. Bope, Company A, tells his Experience.

During the "March to the Sea," I captured a sack of corn meal, which made our mess happy for a few days, and when it was nearly gone, I took the sack, with what remained, and went foraging. I found a sack of nice wheat flour, in a barn, some distance off the road on which our troops were marching. I filled the sack with it, mixing it with the meal, then carried it about twelve miles, to where the troops camped that night. We thought we would have a feast of slap jacks for supper, so some of our mess mixed up a batch of batter, and tried to fry some in a skillet; but in trying to turn it, they found it so brittle that it broke all to pieces. After making several attempts, with no better results, an examination proved the nice white flour, to be plaster of paris, so the corn meal was lost, and I was often joked about the nice white flour.

John Guseman, Company A, tells of getting some fresh meat.

My mess were out of meat, and asked me to get some. I went to a house some distance from camp, and entered. An old negro woman asked me what I wanted there, I said, "something to eat," and started to go into a closed room, when she said, "Hold on massa, there's small pox in thar;" I said, "All right old gal, I'll see;" and walking in, I found a dressed hog, which I put on my back, and took to camp as fast as I could go. The hog was fully appreciated by my messmates and myself.

Henry Blaire, Company A, tells the following.

The Eighty-Second Regiment Indiana V. I. and our regiment went into camp near each other one day, and Colonel Hunter commanding the Eighty-Second, told his men in a loud voice, to look out for their knapsacks, or the Seventeenth Ohio would steal them. Andrew Livingston, Company A, heard the caution, and watching his opportunity, took a big knapsack, belonging to an Eighty-Second Indiana man, while its owner was temporarily absent. When the owner returned and found it missing, he made a great fuss about it. Some of his comrades told him where they thought he could find it, so he came to our Company, and inquired about it. Andy Livingston was sitting on it at the time, but told him, that he (Andy), had seen a man from the Thirty-First O. V. I. (which was also camped near by,) carrying a knapsack from the Eighty-Second camp. The mad Eighty-Second man went to the Thirty-First camp looked all around, then returned to our company, and was making much ado about the missing knapsack, when Andy went to him and said, "Look here, when you lose your knapsack, or anything else, the best way is to say nothing about it, but steal another one;" and the irate man returned to his camp minus his well filled knapsack.

In front of Kenesaw Mountain the rebel sharp-shooters shot a hole through the crown of Richard Cratcher's tall Sibley hat, which stuck up above our breastworks, and the ball came near the top of Dick's head. Henry Leichtner of our company said, "Dick if your hat had been any lower, you would have been killed."

Some rebel women talking among themselves, in hearing of our boys, thought to guy the boys in blue. One said, "I wonder where they get all the indigo to color their clothes. I told them that the northern sheep grew blue wool, in two shades, dark and light, so we did not need any indigo."

Charles H. Thornton, Company A, says :

"I was nearly drowned in the Cumberland River, but was saved by James Gannon, Company A, and a boy of the Fourth Kentucky Infantry.

I captured two barrels of mess pork while on the "March to the Sea," and was therefore called "salt horse" after that.

Lucius Keplar, Company D, says:

That he and William Foncanon, Company D, captured two rebels and recaptured two Union soldiers with them, near the Chattahoochee River, Georgia, and Colonel Ward promoted them to Corporals for the deed. He also says, "I was captured while on the "March to the Sea," but escaped and went back to Chattanooga, Tennessee, after traveling about three hundred miles via by-roads.

George W. Lehman, Company D, writes as Follows.

July 9th, 1864, when our picket line fell back, Francis W. Sanderson, Company D, and myself were not aware of the fact for some little time after. I was behind a log and Sanderson behind a tree. He was killed and I got back to our lines after being shot at many times by the rebels. After the rebels were driven back, three Odd Fellows and I, found the body of Sanderson, who was also an Odd Fellow, and buried it.

Again, August 5th, 1864, I was lying in a shallow ditch, about one foot deep, where we were throwing up earthworks, but were compelled to lie flat, to protect ourselves from rebel shells. Elisha E. Standiford lay on top of me, and said "George, flatten out." He was struck by a shell on the hip and knocked clear off of me and died August 9th, 1864 from this wound.

On the "March to the Sea," when provisions were scarce, a bull was run into camp. We had orders not to shoot; so a big negro volunteered to catch the bull, and the boys formed a big ring around the animal. The negro slipped up behind him, grabbed him by the tail and at the same time planted his feet on the cords of the bull's hind legs, above the knees. Both went several times around the ring. The boys at last helped the negro to throw the bull down. Then they killed him. The negro had a lively ride of it.

Andrew Bauman, Company I, tells the following:

At Crab Orchard, Kentucky, the boys received many things from friends at home. Some one sent me a nice coverlet. I never knew who sent it, but still keep it, and prize it highly, as a memento of war times.

While we lay here, Samuel H. Hurd, assistant Regimental Quartermaster drew from the Government, and receipted for, thirteen wagons, seventy-eight mules and harness for each mule, for our regiment. When an inventory of the stock was taken, however, there were twenty-seven wagons, one hundred and sixty-two mules and one hundred and sixty-two sets of harness. Thus our regiment had more than twice as many teams as it was entitled to, to start with.

The regiment was ordered, later on, to put three days cooked rations into their haversacks, and get ready to move forward. This was done, but instead of each soldier carrying his own knapsack, etc., they were put into the wagons, with many extra blankets, and luxuries from home. When the move was made, the boys did not see the wagons, containing their haversacks etc., for over three days, hence had nothing to eat. About three miles from Wild Cat, Kentucky, Colonel Connell bought a nice beef for the starving boys, and I had just killed it and got the hide off, when the long roll beat, and the regiment was double quicked to Wild Cat, leaving the beef. After that the boys always stuck to their haversacks.

After crossing Fishing Creek, Kentucky, the teamster driving the commissary wagon, gave me his canteen to get it filled with applejack. Being mounted, I soon returned with the applejack. In less than half an hour, the driver was lying on the wagon, drunk, and I was driving the six mules, and as the rebels were found in strong force, and our troops thought best to fall back, I had to drive them all night, recrossing Fishing Creek. This sad experience taught me not to furnish applejack to a teamster thereafter.

Alanson L. Gierhart, Co. K, contributes the following;

When our forces were scattered September 20th, 1863, at Chickamauga, Colonel Ward, without horse or hat, and swinging his sword shouted "For God's sake, boys, rally on the the colors." After repeating this several times he succeeded in getting seventy-five or one hundred of our regiment together, when he led them on a charge. It was in this battle that Henry Sheets, Company H, had the breath knocked out of him by a rebel bullet striking the brass buckle of his belt.

Henry Myers, Company K, had a chunk shot out of his gun stock, in the afternoon. John Price was hit several times; a ball passed through his hat, another through his cartridge box, and still another through his blouse on the shoulder, and had blood drawn on his cheek. I had the hind sight of my gun shot off. Woodson W. Brock, Company K, was hit in the side by a spent ball, and on the elbow by a buckshot.

Christian Flickinger, Company K, was washing his shirt in some water that had rained in the ditch in front of our breastworks, at Chattanooga, Tennessee, when I threw a stone into the mud and water near him. Chris thought it was a piece of a rebel shell, and thinking to save himself, jumped into the water, getting wet, and covered with mud from head to foot. When he found out what had caused the alarm, no one could have been more angry than he was, and I had to keep out of his way for some time afterwards.

At Kenesaw Mountain W. W. Brock had his knapsack shot through near his face, in June, 1864, and on August 5th, 1864, Captain Seth B. Collins, Company K, was struck on the breast, by a piece of a shell, tearing his coat and burning him.

Joel J. Hansberger and Henry Rea, Co. K.

They were two of Sherman's Bumpers and almost always together.

The night before we crossed the Chattahoochee River, Georgia, they went courting and stayed all night. In the morning, they found that some of the Twentieth Corps boys had stolen their horses, saddles and everything they had, so they walked to camp, finding on arrival that the troops had gone. They marched hard all day to catch up, and having had no sleep the night before, nor anything to eat till they overtook the troops, they were much fatigued. However the next morning they had two good horses, saddles, etc., and were ready to forage again. They went about fifteen miles away from the command, but found nothing to eat. Towards evening they were going in the direction the troops were marching and were within six or eight miles of the troops, when they saw about twenty of the Twentieth Corps boys, with a cart drawn by an ox, a wagon drawn by two oxen and a carriage drawn by two mules, all loaded with something to eat. Hansberger suggested to Rea, to take all of it away from the Twentieth Corps boys. Rea asked, "How will you do it?" Hansberger proposed to slip up close to the Twentieth Corps boys, in the woods, which was done. Then he gave the command for the Tenth Alabama Regiment to deploy as skirmishers and shortly ordered them to fire. He and Rea began shooting as fast as they could, over the heads of the Twentieth Corps boys, who left everything in their hurry to keep from being killed or captured as they supposed. Hansberger and Rea got the teams straightened up, drove them up a hill, on to another road, and to camp, with all the meat, potatoes etc. They felt that they were even with the Twentieth Corps boys then.

John J. Kumler, Company K, says:

On the Tullahoma Campaign, one morning, we were advancing on the enemy at Hoover's Gap, Company A were deployed as skirmishers, balance of regiment in support. We could see the enemy on the south side of a clover field and we were ordered to load. It had been raining, so the boys first snapped caps to clear the tubes of water. The regiment double quicked across the clover field and drove the rebel pickets onto their reserve. We advanced into a barnyard. Here the "Johnnies" opened fire on us with two pieces of artillery at short range, and musketry. After the rebels finally retreated, we halted and counted sixteen killed and wounded. While standing here in line, waiting for orders, a cavalry man came dashing up to Colonel Walker, Thirty-First Regiment, O. V. I., (who was then in command of our brigade,) and excitedly said, "Colonel the enemy's cavalry is forming over the hill yonder to charge on you." The Colonel said in a loud tone, "All right they will find us right here, and we'll freeze to them like a brother." We cheered him, and always liked him after that.

STRAY SHOTS.

At the Wild Cat, Kentucky, fight, the Seventeenth Regiment, first heard musketry. Lieutenant Aaron P. Ashbrook, Company B, saw the rebels advancing on a charge, and at the first fire from our men, the rebels all fell to the ground. This, led the Lieutenant to suppose they were all killed, but he soon learned better, when they jumped up and continued the charge; but they were finally repulsed, with heavy loss.

While our army invested Corinth, Mississippi, the camps were overrun with civilians, selling all sorts of things to the soldiers; watches, jewelry, revolvers, knives, songs, etc. Among other things, alleged steel, bullet proof vests, which were nothing more than ordinary vests with metal plates between the lining and outside of the front of the vest. They were sold at ten dollars each and Churchill McMullen, Company B, with many others, bought one. He had it on while engaged in a skirmish, May 17th, 1862 near Corinth, and was wounded in the big toe. The boys laughed at him considerably, and suggested that he wear the vest on his feet thereafter. The vests were soon thrown away, as they did not prove to be bullet proof, and were of no value.

While we lay here, the flies were so bad that they would blow anything that had the least grease on it. The only water obtainable often, at this place, was from holes dug in the ground, with a barrel or box put into them. These would soon fill with poor water, at the best, and flies would collect on the surface of the water, so that they had to be brushed aside with a tin cup while the water was being dipped out.

When the rebels evacuated Corinth, Lieutenant Wm. H. Pugh, Company B, celebrated the event, by wearing a pair of nice white pantaloons, and while in company with several officers, he and Captain Stinchcomb, of same Company, got to fencing with their swords. Stinchcomb watched for an opportunity, and "accidentally on purpose," stuck the point of his sword into the fleshy part of Pugh's thigh, which made the blood run freely for a while, and soon spoiled the white pants.

While we were besieged at Chattanooga, Tennessee, Wm. R. Sain Co. B, shot a peafowl, off the top of a tree, cleaned, boiled and helped to eat it, all who partook of it, pronounced it good. There has been considerable said, about William's appetite, but it did not prevent him from being a tip top good soldier.

James H. Bogle, Company B, was helping to guard a wagon train of supplies for us, while we lay here, when the rebel cavalry captured it. Jim got a box of cheese out of one of the wagons, put it on his shoulder, and started to run to camp with it, but finding he could not travel fast enough with it, to escape capture, threw it away much to his regret, and made good his escape.

The rebels had a thirty-two pound gun on Orchard Knob, near the foot of Mission Ridge, which our boys called the "Swamp Angel."

One day one of the Seventeenth boys was sitting at the edge of a ditch, in front of the breastworks, when a shell from this gun struck the ground very close to him. He merely turned his head to look at the furrow the shell ploughed in the ground by his side, and coolly went on with what he was doing. The boys cheered him lustily. The gun finally burst.

The rebel pickets were on one bank of Chickamauga Creek, and ours on the other bank, and often, at night the Johnnies would whistle Chic-a-mau-ga, which aggravated our boys considerably.

At Thanksgiving 1863, some of the boys made doughnuts out of flour and corn meal mixed, frying them in bacon grease. Although not as toothsome as those our mothers made, they were eaten with quite as much relish.

After the battle of Mission Ridge, the cold New Years of 1864, found the boys getting ready to go home on a thirty days, veteran furlough. They started on January 17th, 1864, arriving at home January 25th.

The boys all respected and had faith in the American Eagle as a national emblem, in fact they had staked their lives and all on maintaining its supremacy, but with regard to the "Ohio Eagle," hatched and reared at Lancaster, Ohio, they were of the opinion that it was not an eagle at all, but a buzzard in disguise. They arrived at this conclusion after viewing it from a distance, hearing its notes, and from the disagreeable odor pervading the bird. Several of the boys made up their minds to investigate the matter when they got home; so one day in February, 1864, they hunted up the nest of the "Ohio Eagle" and finding it in the third story of Sifford's building, they became at once satisfied that it was a buzzard, and in less time than it takes to write this, there was a fine stock of buzzard "pie," laying around in the street, for the boys dumped the whole nest into the street from the third story windows.

There was a very sad occurrence that took place at Lancaster, Ohio, also, while the boys were at home during the thirty days, veteran furlough. An altercation occurred between some of the boys and one George See, and during the melee, that followed, John See, George's father, shot and killed John N. Little, Company A. Great indignation and much excitement prevailed for awhile regarding this matter, and Geo. See came near being killed, by the enraged friends of Little.

While in camp at Ringgold, Georgia, the boys organized a show, giving exhibitions of agility, pantomime, etc, in a building in the town. They would post written notices of the exhibitions, on the trees through the camps surrounding the town. One of these notices spoke of the coming performances as a Pantomime of the "Devel," etc. Chaplain Gardner, of our Regiment, read the notice, and turning to Charles T. DeVelling, Company B, who was standing near, said "Charlie the fellow who wrote that notice, is smarter than the Devil." Charlie asked why? when the Chaplain replied that the writer of the notice, had cheated the Devil out of his eye (i). Charlie thought that was not a bad one for a preacher to get off.

At the battle of Resaca, Georgia, our regiment charged down a hill, on the rebels, who were fortified, when our boys got to the foot of the hill, where there was a small creek, the rebels made it too hot, for them to advance, or retreat, so they lay down in the water and mud. While lying there George Burnside, Company B, said to Jacob Freizner, who lay near him, "Jacob if you want to save yourself, get on top of me." George heard about that saving clause, until he finally "took French leave" of us, near Kingston, Georgia, in 1864.

While lying in front of Kenesaw Mt., Georgia, in June 1864, the boys were obliged to stay in the ditch in daytime, or if they got out, run the risk of being shot by the rebel sharpshooters posted on the mountain. Samuel Spencer, Company C, being quite tall, got cramped up lying in the ditch, and stepped out occasionally to stretch himself. The boys cautioned him about the danger but he would say each time "A rebel bullet has not been made for me yet;" but while barefoot and stretching himself one afternoon, a rebel bullet, that must have been made just for him, struck the calf of his leg, which made him grab that member and howl with pain. The wound never entirely healed, finally killing him in 1880.

During the Atlanta Campaign, the opposing armies often agreed on a cessation of hostilities for a time, and during these periods, many from both armies would meet, on half way ground unarmed, talk, exchange newspapers, trade knives, or coffee for tobacco, or what ever they happened to have to trade. While near the Chattahoochee River, the pickets of both armies, occupied its banks. There was a large rock about midway in the stream, and the pickets from both armies would swim out to the rock, and enjoy a chat thereon, until duty called them away.

At one time some of our boys were afflicted with a peculiar disease of the eyes, called "night, or moon blindness." Those afflicted, went blind at sun down, and remained so until daylight, when they could again see. First Sergeant John E. Lane, Company B, was thus afflicted, and he with Charles T. DeVelling, of same Company, came near being captured by reason of it. August 27th, 1864. The night our troops started for Jonesborough, Georgia, Charlie was left to take care of John, who could not see to keep up with the troops. The two slept on a pole bed, abandoned by some officer, who had as a protection to his quarters, a small breastworks made of logs and earth. In the morning the rebels discovered that our troops had left, and came swarming over our deserted camps, picking up clothing and such things as our troops had thrown away. Some of them got pretty close to John and Charlie, who were eating crackers and raw pork for breakfast, without seeing them, or being seen. The boys, supposing that a strong picket line had been left by our troops, as had been done on several nights before, when similar movements were made, were taken much by surprise, to see the rebels. John was about to shoot the nearest one, but Charlie prevented, by whispering to him not to shoot, for it would attract the rebels to their hiding place, and capture, or death would be inevitable, while escape was possible if he did not shoot. John saw the point, and the rebel's life was spared. The frightened boys made their escape, and after a very forced march, overtook our troops, much exhausted, but happy to join their comrades.

James Hickman, Sergeant Company I, had a Henry repeating rifle, and on August 30th, 1864, while we were near Rough and Ready Station, Georgia, on our way to Jonesborough, he captured eleven rebels; four of them in one squad. Three of this squad were armed, the fourth one was an artillery man. Nearly all that he captured belonged to the 54th Tennessee regiment. Colonel Ward hearing about this daring feat, took "Poke," as Hickman was called, with his Henry rifle, to see General Stanley, who asked "Poke" all about capturing the rebels, and examined the rifle.

While on the "March to the Sea," the boys found many things that had been buried, to prevent the "Yanks" getting them: medicines, jewelry and valuables of different kinds. If the boys saw fresh dirt any place, they at once went to jobbing their iron ramrods down into the ground where the fresh dirt was, and generally they brought to light some hidden treasure. At Louisville, Georgia, they found an abandoned cistern full of silk dresses and other wearing apparel; and to see the boys rigged out in all sorts of finery, was enough to make any one but the former owners thereof, laugh. Meat was found hanging in the tops of tall pine trees, and many other things, in all sorts of places.

At Savannah, Georgia, December 24th, 1864, the boys went about six miles to the oyster beds down the Savannah river at Thunderbolt, after oysters, of which they brought to camp two wagon loads in the shell. Being called out on picket duty next day, they did not have the Christmas feast expected. Not knowing much about oysters, some of the boys continued to eat them after they were unfit to eat, and were made sick by doing so. Rice in the sheaf, much the same as wheat is in the North, was also brought to camp, and with a club the grains were beaten out, in a hole chopped in a log, for the purpose. It was then put into a rubber blanket and tossed up many times, so the wind could blow the chaff away, leaving the grain. After boiling it with fresh beef, in swamp water colored red by the straw from pine trees falling into it, the rice was freely eaten, regular rations being very scarce at that time.

About this time Jerry Howard, colored cook for Company B, drew his first blouse. Some of the boys treated him several times, so he began to feel good, danced and shouted. After carrying on in this way for a while, he happened to think of his new blouse, and said excitedly, "where's my new brouse?" Captain James T. Weakley, Company B, said, "Jerry you've got it on." Jerry looked, found it so, then said "Bress God," and then went on with his dancing.

The members of Company B presented a nice photograph album to their Captain, James T. Weakley, on July 20th, 1865, at camp Chase, Ohio, as a farewell memento of their respect for him.

William R. McGuire, Company G, was regimental bugler, and became quite expert at sounding the calls.

Captain Stinchcomb, Company B, required Simon Mast of his company to sit on a log, and pound on it, with the pole of an axe, for an hour or so, as a punishment for some infraction of discipline.

Doctor David D. Benedict extracted teeth for the boys. He extracted one for Lucas Gafell, Company A, who said the Doctor pulled him all over the parade grounds before getting it out.

William C. Williams, Company B, cut his thumb while whittling one day in camp, and he said "Blame it, that is my mother's fault." Some one asked him how that could be, and he said, "Because she always told me to take care of my fingers, but never said a word about my thumbs."

At one time Captain O. W. Brown, Company B, felt called upon to inflict a slight punishment upon Peter G. Shoemaker and Thomas D. Osborn, of his company, for some rules broken by them, so ordered that each carry a rail on his shoulder for an hour or two, which they manfully did; but they both declared at the end, of the time, that the rails had grown to be as heavy as saw logs.

The twins Abner and Ezra Cadwallader, Company E, attracted much attention. John Duff, Company E, truly said of them that "One looks so much like both, that you can't tell tither from which." They had very large noses, were always together, and one, (but we don't know which,) followed closely behind the other, where ever he went. They enlisted together and were discharged together on the Surgeon's certificate of disability, and it is supposed they both suffered, from the same disease. They were quiet, inoffensive, childlike, good soldiers. The first time paymaster Major Cook paid our regiment, he had given Abner his money, and called for Ezra, who presented himself. The Major said "I just paid you, I want Ezra Cadwallader;" Ezra said, "I am the one;" but the Major replied, "I just paid you, now step to one side," and he could not be otherwise convinced until Abner and Ezra were together presented to him.

It was a long time after Frank Demming, Company A, enlisted, performed picket and other duties, played cards, chewed and smoked tobacco, ate, slept and mingled, with the other members of the company, before her sex was discovered. She was put in the guard house, for being drunk, looked and acted more like a boy than a woman, and played her part as a soldier so well, that even Seymour Kinney with whom she messed, did not mistrust that she was other than what she appeared. She was discharged, but refused to leave the regiment, or wear female attire; she stayed at the quarters of Surgeon Washington L. Schenck, until an order was finally issued to send her to Nashville, Tennessee. The night before she was to start, she took a dose of poison, with suicidal intentions, and was only prevented from accomplishing this end, by prompt, heroic treatment, at the hands of Dr. Schenck, who undoubtedly saved her life. When she was able to travel, she was sent away and we lost sight of her.

Company F had a few very unruly men in it. Captain Daniel P. Sullivan had George Auman bucked and gagged, for getting drunk and abusing him, and he was a good soldier too, when sober. Jessie Weeks and Joseph Dial, Company F, while drunk, abused Jacob Hinebarger, Company F, and others, Captain Ezra Ricketts, Company F, told John Jarvis, Company F, to quiet this disturbing element, which John did with a club, so effectually, that Weeks and Dial were laid up for some time thereafter, in fact they were nearly killed.

Whenever the regiment lay in camp for a while, nearly all kinds of sport were indulged in to while away the time; card and checker playing, dice throwing, pitching horse shoes, jumping, running foot races, wrestling, foot ball, singing, telling stories, reading, writing letters; etc. Dancing was a pleasant way of passing the time, when the weather was suitable; the boys acting the ladies part in a dance would often tie a rag on the left arm, to designate them. There were several violins in the regiment. John Duff, Company E, and David Binkley, Company B, each owned one, and could perform on it very well. John Duff also repaired watches for the boys. Dave Binkley could also use a razor or a pair of shears to advantage. He cut the hair and shaved the face of many a soldier. He was also quite an expert at tatooing with India ink, and a good soldier besides.

When the regiment first went to the front, it had twenty-seven six-mule wagons to haul tents, cooking utensils, extra clothing etc. Each company was provided with Sibley tents, in which quite a number could sleep. There was a brass band belonging to the regiment, in addition to the drummers and fifers belonging to the companies. Toward the last this was all changed. In place of twenty-seven wagons, one only was allowed. In place of large tents, the dog, or shelter tent, carried by each soldier was the only shelter; and the brass band was dispensed with in Sept., 1862. The boys were obliged to carry in and on their knapsacks, all their bedding, tents, extra clothing, cooking utensils, and whatever else they wanted, and in their haversacks from one to five days ration; water in their tin or wooden canteens, from forty to one hundred rounds of ammunition in their cartridge boxes and pockets, besides their gun and bayonet; all of which made a load that many would think a man could not carry; but with all this load, through dust and in the hot Summer sun, or through mud and rain, the boys would march often from twenty to thirty miles a day; some times go double quick and even charge on the enemy.

While passing through Kentucky and Tennessee, during the early part of the war, the fences there, were made of red cedar rails, which made excellent fire wood for the boys. Later on, while passing through Georgia and the Carolinas, the rich, fat pine knots, found on the ground, or in rotten pine logs, made very quick, hot fires, and were easily ignited; but they made a terrible black smoke, which covered the boys while making coffee, frying fresh pork and slapjacks, or cooking yams.

When the men were thrown on their own resources, it was laughable to see the blunders made, and the messes of stuff that were half cooked or spoiled. Alleged biscuits, were attempted once in a while. Ye gods, what curiosities they were! The first time navy beans were issued, and cooked by the boys, they were all thrown away after being boiled, and the government energetically abused for issuing wormy beans; the germs of the beans were mistaken for little pink worms. They learned better as time went on, and some of them became very fair cooks. There were but few of them that knew how to use a needle when they enlisted, but necessity soon compelled them to learn to sew on buttons; but when a patch was attempted, the mystery deepened, and we will draw the veil.

Forty-two dollars a year was the sum allowed by the government to clothe the private infantry soldier. If he drew more the value of the excess was deducted from his pay; if he drew less, (which was a rare occurrence,) he was paid the difference. The articles included in his outfit were a cap or hat, blouse, overcoat, trousers, shirts, drawers, socks, shoes, a woolen and a rubber blanket. Clothing was issued to the men, regardless of their size, and in order to obtain anything like a fit, much exchanging among themselves, often had to be resorted to. Even then it was impossible to suit all, which occasioned much fun and more profanity.

Once the boys were to be paid in government bonds, some received them under protest, cutting off, and giving or throwing away the interest coupons, not knowing the value thereof; others refusing to accept the bonds, were paid in greenbacks.

The "graybacks" or "body guards" as some called them, were the one, great, ever present, source of annoyance to the soldiers; not to be gotten rid of by fair means or foul. No one was exempt from them. They showed no partiality, and were no respecter of persons. Boiling water was the only sure cure for them, and some soldiers thought that even that did not affect them much; at any rate there was always a full supply.

"I feel him in my shirt, upon my neck,
 "His griping grip upon my starboard deck,
 "I cannot sleep, I cannot rest at all,
 "For his omnivorous bite and omnipresent crawl."

Some of the tricks resorted to, by the "play offs," to avoid doing duty, were novel. Some feigned night blindness, others would become suddenly sick with cramp colic, while a few feigned deafness, and others became speechless, having lost their voices. Rheumatism was a favorite excuse for not doing duty. A little wheat flour, or chalk, judiciously applied to the tongue, was sufficient evidence for the Surgeon, that its owner was not well, and the slick owner of the tongue, would be excused for a day or so. One or two of the boys would run around among the tents for a bit, just before the "sick call," then going to the Surgeon, to be treated for palpitation of the heart, were generally excused from duty. Some swallowed tobacco to make themselves sick.

The slaves had been made to believe that the Yankees were a vicious set of animals, with horns, and when they saw the "Boys in Blue" for the first time, were much surprised not to find them with horns on, but looking much the same as other human beings.

The rebels would say, "What did you'ns all come down here for, to fight we'uns?" When a division of our army passed over a road, the women, white and black, would say, "Where you'ns all come from? We didn't know there were so many men in the whole world."

Our troops called the rebels "Johnnies," while they called us "Billy Yanks."

"Grab a root" and "Here's your mule" were the bywords, that could be heard at all times, under any and all circumstances, in our army.

When we were paid off, the boys had a general settlement among themselves, for money borrowed, trades made, etc. Many of our soldiers sent money home by the agents appointed by the State of Ohio for that purpose. These agents would receipt for what money was given them by the boys, and take it to Ohio, where it was paid to those for whom it was intended. Others would send their surplus money home by comrades going to Ohio.

Company B, had a fair sample of a gentlemanly soldier in the person of Corporal Edward Thompson. All who knew him will concede, that under any and all circumstances he was a gentleman, during the war, as well as before, and since that period.

Sergeant Frank Andrews, Company K, carried the flag, so did Sergeant John Jarvis, Company F, Corporal Amos Smith, Company K, Sergeant James Hickman, Company I, Corporal William Zimmer, Company E, Corporal Isaac Pearce, Company B, and Sergeant Oliver S. Kibbey, Company G.

THINGS FUNNY TO SEE.

Captain Owen W. Brown, Company B, jump, when a shell struck the tree behind which he was sitting, on the first days fight at Chickamauga, Georgia.

George Burnsides, Company B, reading a newspaper upside down.

George H. Godden, Company B, dancing.

William R. Sain, Company B, eating roasting ears.

Peter G. Shoemaker, Company B, walking in a hurry.

The Cadwallader Twins, Company E, in motion or at rest.

Ward, Augustus			Drowned in the Missouri River.
Weist, William H,	1883	Near Baltimore, O ..

One by one they are being mustered out by the Great Commander. one by one they are going down to "their low green tents whose curtains never outward swing." When Reveille is sounded on the other shore, and "Taps" are beaten, may we stand shoulder to shoulder as of yore, and the flag we loved when living wave over millions yet unborn. God bless every man who wore the blue during the Rebellion.

Why He's a Comrade.

[J. W. Crawford ("Captain Jack") to Corporal James Tanner.]

Hold on! Hold on! My goodness! You take my breath, my son,
 A firin' questions 't me like shots from a Gatlin' gun.
 Why do I wear this eagle an' flag an' brazen star?
 An' why do my old eyes glisten when somebody mentions war?
 An' why do I call men "Comrade," an' why do my eyes grow bright
 When you hear me tell your gran'-ma I'm goin to Post to-night.
 Come here, you inquisitive rascal, and set on your gran'-pa's knee,
 An' I'll try to answer the broadsides you've been a firein' at me.
 Away back in the sixties, and along afore you were born,
 The news came aflashin' to us one bright and sunny morn
 That some of our Southern brothers, athinkin' no doubt, 'twar right,
 Had trailed their guns on our banner, an' opened a nasty fight
 The great big guns were boomin, 'an' the shot flyin thick an fast,
 And troops all over the Southland war rapidly bein' massed;
 An' a thrill went through the nation—a fear that our glorious land
 Might be split an' divided an' ruined by mistaken brother's hand.
 Lord, but wan't there excitement, an' didn't the boys' eyes flash?
 An' didn't we curse our brothers for bein' so foolish an' rash?
 An' didn't we raise the neighbors with loud and continued cheers
 When Abe sent out a doekymment a callin' for volunteers?
 An' didn't we flock to the colors when the drums began to beat,
 An' didn't we march with proud steps along the village street?
 An' didn't the people cheer us when we got aboard the cars
 With the flag awavin' o'er us, and went away into the wars?
 I'll never forgit your grand-ma as she stood outside o' the train.
 Her face as white as a snowdrift, her tears afallin' like rain.
 She stood there quiet an' death-like, mid all o' the rush and noise,
 For the war were atakin' from her, her husband and three brave boys—
 Bill, Charley and little Tommy—just turned eighteen, but as true
 An' gallant a little soldier as ever wore the blue.

It seemed almost like murder to tear her poor heart so,
But your gran' dad couldn't stay, baby, an' the boys war determined to go.
The evenin' afore we started she called the boys to her side,
An' told 'em as how they war always their mother's joy and pride,
An' though her soul was in torture, an' her poor heart bleedin' and sore,
An' though she needed her darlings, their country needed 'em more.
She told 'em to do their duty wharever their feet might roam,
An' to never forgit in battle their mother was prayin' at home;
An' if (an' the tears near choked her) they should fall in front o' the foe,
She'd go to the blessed Savior and ax Him to lighten the blow.
Bill lays an' awaits the summons 'neath Spottsylvania's sod,
An' on the field of Artietam Charlie's spirit went back to God;
An' Tommy, our baby Tommy, we buried one star-lit night
Along with his fallen comrades, just after the Wilderness fight.
The lightnin' struck our family tree and stripped it of every limb,
Aleavin' only this bear old trunk astandin' alone and grim.
My boy, that's why your grand-ma, when you kneel to the God you love,
Makes you ax Him to watch your uncles an' make 'em happy above.
That's why you sometimes see her with tear drops in her eyes,
That's why you sometimes catch her atryin to hide her sighs;
That's why at our great reunions she looks so solemn an, sad;
That's why her heart seems a breakin' when the boys are jolly and glad;
That's why you sometimes find her in the bed-room overhead,
Down on her knees aprayin', with their pictures laid out on the bed;
That's why the old-time brightness will light up her face no more
Till she meets her hero warriors in the camp on the other shore.
An' when the great war was over, back came the veterans true,
With not one star amissin' from the azure field of blue;
An' the boys who on the field o' battle had stood the fiery test,
Formed Posts o' the great Grand Army in the North, South, East an' the West
Fraternity, Charity, Loyalty, is the motto 'neath which they train—
Their object to care for the helpless an' banish sorrow an' pain
From the homes of the widows an' orphans o' the boys who have gone before
To answer their names at roll call in the great Grand Army Corps.
An' that's why we wear these badges, the eagle an' flag an' star,
Worn only by veteran heroes who fought in that bloody war,
An' that's why my old eyes glisten while talkin' about the fray.
An' that's why I call men "Comrade" when I meet 'em every day;
An' that's why I tell your grandma "I'm going to Post to-night,"
For there's where I meet the old boys who stood with me in the fight;
An' my child that's why I taught you to love and revere the men
Who come here awearin' badges, to fight those battles again.
They are gallant heroes who stood 'mid shot and shell,
An' followed the flying colors right into the mouth o' hell
They are the men whose valor saved the land from disgrace and shame,
An' lifted her back in triumph to her perch on the dome o' fame.
An' as long as you live my darling, till your pale lips in death are mute,
When you see that badge on a bosom take off your hat and salute:
An' if any old veteran should halt you an' question why you do,
Just tell him you've got a right to, for your grandad's a Comrade, too.
